LOOKING BACKWARD.

Retail merchants will always find it profitable to look over the contents of this Bulletin from month to month and especially the tabulated statement of cases terminated. The information they receive there may be of great benefit to them in the purchase of certain food products.

Great caution should be exercised concerning cider vinegar. For some reason a considerable quantity of the alleged "cider" vinegar on the market does not contain a trace of cider. It is not cider vinegar and its sale under that name is a violation of law. The number of prosecutions instituted for selling misbranded cider vinegar should lead to great caution upon the part of retailers.

The law of Pennsylvania permits the use of a limited quantity of benzoate of soda in the preparation of certain food products. But it is unlawful to use more than one-tenth of one per cent. Sometimes the manufacturer becomes careless and indifferent and the result is too much benzoate of soda in the articles sold by him.

During the year 1910, a considerable number of cases were prosecuted and terminated against manufacturers or venders of non-alcoholic drinks. The dealers had forgotten the requirement of the law, hence the trouble which came to them, overtaking them suddenly like a thief in the night. Some of the agents of the bureau collected samples of milk containing added water and some from which a portion of the butter-fat had been removed. Some cream was likewise found to be below the legal standard, 15 per cent. butter-fat. Also a large number of ice cream cases were terminated in which the frozen dainty failed to comply with the provisions of the ice cream act.

We are pleased to report that the line of canned goods put up in this country, consisting of potted meats, soups and vegetables, have all been found to comply with the requirements of the Pennsylvania pure food law. This is complimentary to the manufacturers and an assurance of safety to the consuming public.

During the year 1910, Special Agent Cassidy found his troubles in Philadelphia, some of which were due to the persistency of dealers in rotten eggs or eggs which were really unfit for human food. This nauseating evil was remedied, in part at least, by the arrest and prosecution of some offenders. This business of selling putrid eggs is one of the most revolting in which any human being can engage. Scarcely any punishment could be too severe for the offenders.

During the year 1910 samples of so-called fancy cakes which were artificially colored were found to be injurious to health. Several prosecutions were instituted and terminated. We have already mentioned the tendency to violate law by venders of non-alcoholic beverages. In many of these cases saccharin was used as a substitute for sugar, a violation of the soft drink act of this Commonwealth.

There seems to be a disposition upon the part of some manufacturers of sausages to put up a small bit of deceit upon the consumer. The plan is to use cereal, usually potato flour as a binder. This absorbs a large quantity of water. The potato flour costs three cents a pound, the water nothing. Thus in every dollar's worth of sausage manufactured according to this method there is fraud to the amount of 30 cents. While this fraudulent sausage is not injurious to health it does greatly affect the pocketbook in these days of high prices. It is the full intention of the Dairy and Food Division to break up this evil.

NOTICES OF JUDGMENT.

The United States Department of Agriculture, through its pure food division, continues to bring manufacturers or venders of adulterated food products before the Federal courts. Some persons continue also to think that the men who are willing to deceive the consumer or actually to imperil his health ought to be dealt with quite severely, although they admit that when the offense is nominal only mercy should have the right of way. From a large lot of notices of judgment recently sent out from the office of the Secretary of Agriculture, we select the following:

Forty-one barrels of fish shipped by one dealer in New York city, and twenty-three shipped by another in the same city, both shipments having been sent to Virginia, were seized and destroyed, the fish not being fit for human consumption. One might imagine Virginia could get fish much nearer home if her people were to make the effort.

Three of the judgments concern manufacturers who were charged with misbranding the cheese they sent out from their factories. In no case, however, was the manufacturer accused of adulterating his product. These venders got into the clutches of the government because the weight of the product did not correspond with the marks on the boxes. In one instance fifty-nine boxes of cheese weighed 98 pounds less than was asserted; in another instance 95 boxes fell short by 108 pounds, seven ounces, while 70 boxes were 65 pounds short in weight. In each case the goods were returned to the owners after they had filed a bond conditioned that the said boxes of cheese should not be sold or otherwise disposed of contrary to the provisions of the federal food and drugs act. If these boxes had escaped the vigilance of the government officials somebody would have paid for about 271 pounds of cheese that the boxes didn't contain.

An interesting case involving the adulteration of macaroni by the addition of a poisonous coal tar product called martius yellow came before the United States District court for the Northern District of Illinois. The manufacturers admitted that martius yellow had been used but alleged that the quantity was so small that it would not prove injurious to health. In the course of an opinion Judge Kenesaw M. Landis said:

"It is the duty of the court to give the act a fair and reasonable construction for the accomplishment of its object. That object is the exclusion from interstate commerce of food products so adulterated as to endanger health. And where, as here, it clearly appears that a poisonous substance wholly foreign to the food product has been added to it, solely to mislead and deceive, the court is under no duty to endeavor to protect the offender against loss from destruction of the adulterated article by indulging in hair-splitting speculation as to whether the amount of poison used may possibly have been so nicely calculated as not to kill or be of immediate serious injury. With a portion of our population macaroni is a staple article of food, and under the evidence here the cumulative effect of the poison in the substance under examination would be injurious to health." Accordingly the court ordered the adulterated macaroni to be condemned and destroyed.

The manufacturers of "Golden Egg Noodles" and "Golden Egg Macaroni," who were haled before the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania on the charge of misbranding their products were by no means so guilty as the parties who were before Judge Landis. They had given the impression by their labels that egg was a principal ingredient in the noodles and the macaroni they sent out on this particular market. As a matter of fact analysis of these articles showed that egg was by no means the principle ingredient. The manufacturers admitted that they had broken the law but declared that they had done so ignorantly, having no desire to disobey any of the requirements of the Food and Drugs act. In consideration of the facts in the case the goods were restored to the manufacturers upon their promising not to undertake to sell the same contrary to law and giving a proper bond in the sum of $1,000.

In accordance with proceedings in the United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania, 108 barrels and 16 half barrels of vinegar were seized because they were misbranded, claiming to be cider vinegar when there was no apple cider in them. Similar proceedings were instituted against the manufacturers of 68 barrels of vinegar shipped into the state of Michigan. In both instances the vinegar was delivered to the manufacturers upon the execution of a bond to respect the laws. We suppose somebody who lived in other lands beyond the jurisdiction of the United States may possibly have a chance to consume that vinegar. And yet if it wasn't fit for use here it should have been destroyed. At least some folks cherish an idea of that sort.

SOMETHING ABOUT COFFEE.

According to Harper's Weekly the first use of coffee as a beverage is traced to the Persians. It came into great repute in Arabia Felix in 1450, and passed thence into Egypt and Syria, and in 1511 into Constantinople. It was conveyed from Mocha, in Arabia, to Holland in 1616, and was first brought to England by Nathaniel Canopus, a Cretan, in 1650. The first coffee house in England was kept by a man named Jacobs, in Oxford, in 1650. The first in London was opened by a Greek in George Yard, Lombard street, in 1652. Pope's well known lines in "The Rape of the Lock," show that it was familiarly known in his time. Toward the middle of the fifteenth century, it is related, a poor Arab was traveling in Abyssinia. Finding himself weak and weary he stopped near a grove. For fuel wherewith to cook his rice he cut down a tree that happened to be filled with dried berries. His meal being cooked and eaten, the traveler discovered that these half burnt berries were fragrant. He collected a number of them, and on crushing them with a stone, found that the aroma was increased to a great extent. While wondering at this he accidentally let the substance fall into a can that contained his scanty supply of water. A miracle! The almost putrid water was purified. He brought it to his lips; it was fresh and agreeable; and after a short rest the traveler so far recovered his strength and energy as to be able to resume his journey. The lucky Arab gathered as many of the berries as he could, and having arrived at Aden, informed the mufti of his discovery. That worthy was an inveterate opium smoker who had been suffering for years from the influences of the poisonous drug. He tried an infusion of the roasted berries and was so delighted at the recovery of his former vigor that in gratitude to the tree he called it camuha, which in Arabic signifies "force." It is said that the Mohamedans shortly after the introduction of coffee employed it to keep them awake during their long religious services. Later it was considered an intoxicating liquor, and hence to be classed among the beverages prohibited by the Koran. Still its use was continued, however, and though it took a long time for its influence to pass beyond the confines of Arabia, it finally came into favor at Constantinople, where coffee houses were opened in the sixteenth century. Until 1690 the only source of the world's supply of coffee was Arabia, but in that year Governor General Van Hoorne, of the Dutch East India Company, received a few coffee seeds from traders who plied between the Arabian gulf and Java. These seeds were planted and grew so well that the industry of coffee growing in Java received a tremendous impetus. One of the plants first grown there was sent to the Governor of the Dutch East India Company. It was planted in Holland and seeds from it were sent to the West Indies, and then to other parts of the world.

BUTTER-MAKERS GET DIPLOMAS.

The Dairy Husbandry Department of Pennsylvania State College, has sent certificates to nine Pennsylvania butter-makers. These butter-makers have complied with the requirements, namely, that they take part in every contest held during the year and that they receive an average score of 91 and no score below 90. The awards show the complete score for each month, together with the averages and also the analyses of the butter. Many encouraging letters have been received the past year and the number of entries has increased. The general plan of the contests will be continued the present year. The following named received certificates of merit:

THE HIGHER AGRICULTURE.

Speaking of the proposal of the president of the Williamson Free School of Mechanical Trades to add the study of agriculture in addition to the other trades taught, Hoard's Dairyman in an editorial says among other things that it likes the tang of the word "trade" as applied to agriculture and especially its incorporation into the curriculum of a trade school. It is a recognition of the fact that there is a higher agriculture, an agriculture that demands not only scientific knowledge but the skill and acumen to apply such knowledge to the practical affairs of the farm, whether these relate to the soil, the cultivating and harvesting of crops or the selection, breeding and care of the farm animals, so that they may utilize to the best advantage, the labor which they consume—for in the final analysis labor measures the cost and value of every product. This is not denying that many a farmer, carpenter and engineer has attained a high degree in his trade or profession through the toilsome school of experience and self-education, but the supply of such workmen, competent both to plan and execute and thereby secure the higher rewards of labor, whether when working for themselves or for others, is much below present day demands. Modern dairying is advanced agriculture, agriculture in its highest development, continues the paper. It makes a factory of the farm. It takes the crude product of the common farmer, the grass, grain and hay of the fields, the raw material, so to speak, corresponding to the ore of the mines and the lumber in the forests, and transforms it into the highest forms of human foods. In dairy farming we find the higher agriculture in its highest development. It begins with the soil, ranges through all the labyrinths of crop raising and harvesting, animal industries and its specialties, and reaches the acme of agricultural endeavor in the production of clean, healthful milk and its derivatives. In such a vocation there is certainly ample room for the employment of the best that the human intellect can accomplish.

REAPING THE HARVEST.

Discussing the condition of the butter market the Chicago Produce News recently said:

"It is the large holdings of centralized stock that are causing the most depression and these stocks are unsalable, except at a heavy loss. The best centralized goods which cost 27 cents cannot be sold for over 25 cents and there is very little demand. The under grades in the coolers are in great excess and it looks as though the process and ladle men will have a chance to do some business before next May. All of which, remarks the Dairy Record, would prove that at least some of the centralizers and their agents are now reaping the harvest sown by their reckless system of buying any and all kinds of cream, often times deliberately demoralizing what little regard the farmers had for quality, in order to get the cream away from the local plant.

NATIONAL DAIRY SHOW.

The announcement that the National Dairy Show Association will increase its capital $10,000 to $25,000, is good news, remarks The Dairy Record. The association has in the past, as we understand it, worked under the handicap of a too limited capital and the sale of more stock offers an opportunity to remedy this shortcoming and to identify more closely with the association than has been the case in the past, certain interests that have not been very strongly represented among the stockholders, but who in the nature of things may well become financially interested in the show. The association would have no trouble in disposing of the stock; while the shows so far held have not been overburdened with financial profits, they have nevertheless been profitable to the dairy industry in all its departments, and as the association grows older and gathers more experience, it will not only become one of the leading factors in the upbuilding of the dairy industry, but should also prove itself a reason ably good financial venture. The idea on which the show is built furnishes a solid foundation and year by year the management has shown itself capable of coping with difficulties that would have discouraged less enthusiastic workers. These men have gone steadily ahead and accomplished things in a manner that insures success, once the show takes itself among the big institutions of the country.

SALTS OF TIN IN PRESERVED FOOD.

It is almost impossible to use any vessel coated with tin without the food taking up a minute fraction of the metal. Put acid fruits in a saucepan to be cooked in the ordinary household and by such cooking for a few minutes as much salts of tin will be taken up by the food as there would be if it had been preserved in a tin can for a long time. According to most authorities salts of tin are not poisonous and tin itself is not a poisonous metal.

Professor F. R. S. London, says on this subject:

"Minute particles of tin are without effect on man. One thousand times the quantity ever found in a can of tinned goods would do no harm. These proportion of metals (such as analysis has shown in some instances to exist in canned goods), are undeserving of serious notice. I question whether they represent more than the amount of tin we periodically wear off sauce pans in the preparation of food. I recently found a trace of tin in water which had been boiled in a tin kettle. I have never been able to satisfy myself that a can of ordinary food contains even a useful medicinal dose of such true soluble compound of tin as is likely to have any effect on man."

WATER FOR THE DAIRY COW.

It is a very important thing that the water drunk by the dairy cows, remarks the Dairy Record, giving three or more gallons of milk daily be warmed to about 60 degrees F. Otherwise the cows will not drink as much as they need to keep up a good milk flow. It does not take much ice water to chill a thin-fleshed cow through and through on a cold winter day, especially when she is compelled to walk some distance through the snow or a cutting wind to get to the tank or pond. Experiments made at the Missouri Station show that drinking water is needed in proportion to the milk yield. That is a cow giving six gallons of milk a day, needs about twice as much water as a cow giving three gallons a day. If the water is too cold to be comfortable if drunk in large quantities the cow will not drink enough and as a result will drop considerably in her milk yield. When Missouri Chief Josephine was giving about 100 pounds of milk each day last winter she drank about 31 gallons of water. Imagine how she would have suffered if it had been ice water. It was warmed, however, and Josephine did not chill after drinking. A good tank heater, or some other device should be used to warm the water for the dairy cow.

NOVIA SCOTIA'S DOGFISH INDUSTRY.

During the last season 700,000 dogfish were bought at the rendering factory at Clark's Harbor, 70 miles from Yarmouth, and reduced to oil and fertilizer and glue. Two or three vessels have been in commission during the summer gathering up the fish from the various stations along the coast and delivering them at the factory, which has been in operation most of the time night and day, with two shifts of hands, and overtime work during the season. The output in oil and fertilizer has found a ready market, and those operating the factory are pleased with the season's work. It is stated that the factory, inaugurated as an experiment three seasons ago, will be greatly enlarged for the next year and the capital doubled. During the past season the enterprise gave steady employment to a considerable force of men, and three or four vessels were constantly employed.

ADVICE TO BUTTERMAKERS.

In the report of the Dairy and Food Commissioner of Wisconsin appears the following written by Assistant Commissioner U. S. Baer. The board of directors of all co-operative factories should read it:

"A creamery or a cheese factory to be complete should have a bathroom and office. A room approximately five by nine feet just off the office, with a floor of galvanized iron and a bathtub equipped with hot and cold water, is a most desirable thing to have.

"Cleanliness is a virtue practiced almost universally throughout the animal kingdom. Personal cleanliness on the part of the factory operator becomes a mark of observation by the patron and aids in increasing the butter or cheese maker's respectability.

"I have often heard factory proprietors complain that the operator did not keep up his books and records of the factory's business in a neat and orderly manner. No man should expect scientific and scholarly bookkeeping of one forced to balance the flat side of a cord wood stick over the corner of a cream or cheese vat to suffice for a writing desk.

"The modern buttermaker and cheesemaker is a business man and should have the convenience usually accorded a man in that vocation. Give him a small light, airy room, away from the heat and noise of the factory proper, fitted up with a desk or writing table and an easy chair. It will prove a good investment.

"Do not put a bed in this office for your unmarried buttermaker or cheesemaker. Secure a decent boarding place for him. Do not build living rooms over any part of the factory adjoining any side of it for your married buttermaker or cheesemaker. Provide a decent house for him, situated conveniently near his work."

THE ICE CREAM STANDARD.

Walter Jeffreys Carlin, in an article in The Ice Cream Trade Journal says the present condition of the business of manufacturing ice cream is unsatisfactory from a legal standpoint. Among other things he says:

"As far as the National Government is concerned the Department of Agriculture continues to issue notices and hold hearings but so far no prosecutions have been attempted. * * * The only new development as far as the standard question generally is concerned is the passage of the Association of State and National Food and Dairy Departments at the New Orleans convention of a resolution asking congress to enact a law providing for the appointment by the President of the United States of a Foods Standard Commission, to be composed of food officials and chemists, state and national, connected with the enforcement of food laws, and representative manufacturers, producers and dealers in foods, which commission shall fix food standards to be used in the enforcement of the Food and Drugs act.

"As to state standards, the statutes establishing them, are so varied that it is almost impossible to summarize them. We have statutes which on their face establish standards ranging from 4 per cent. butter-fat in Maryland, to 14 per cent. in Missouri. Where the standard is not set forth in the statute, a commissioner is sometimes empowered to adopt a standard. When this occurs the standards so adopted vary, ranging from 8 per cent. in Indiana to 14 per cent. in Kentucky, while many important states—for example, Massachusetts, New York, Ohio, Connecticut and New Jersey have no standards. In states where there is no standards and no authority is given the commissioner to adopt one the commissioner sometimes issues a standard without authority giving us the class of unauthorized standards. * * * When a state has or claims to have a standard, the question naturally arises as to whether or not the same is enforced, and, if so, to what extent. No such question should arise, but in a country cursed with so many laws many become 'dead letter' laws; and in some states where the commissioners have realized that the standards were unenforceable, that is the situation—the statute is ignored. In states where the standards are unauthorized no attempt except a 'little bluff' is made to enforce the standard, but in some states there are standards which officials are attempting to enforce."

WHAT THE NATIONS DRINK.

The Strassburger Post has recently devoted space to a comparative statistical study of the thirst as shown by the amount of liquor consumed by the inhabitants of various European states. The task is complicated by the varieties of liquid refreshments which are met with in different countries and which are common to few. It appears, however, that the Dane drinks on an average of 104 liters of beer, very little wine, but 24 liters of brandy each year. The Swede is satisfied with 56 liters of beer and 9 of alcohol. The Norwegian is one of the most temperate of northern nations, consuming but 31 liters of beer and 3 of brandy per head of population. The Russian takes 5 liters each of beer and vodka, whereas his ally, the Frenchman, needs 32 liters of beer, 10 of brandy and 108 of wine. John Bull imbibes six liters of whisky or gin, 2 of claret and 152 of beer or stout. The Dutchman rests content with 38 liters of beer and 8½ of brandy. His neighbor, the Belgian is more capacious, being satisfied with 221 liters of beer and 9 of alcohol. The Austrian and the Hungarian each absorb 11½ liters of schnapps and 16 of wine, the former needing in addition 80 liters of beer, while 11 will suffice for the latter. Of all the inhabitants of Europe the Italian is the one who drinks the least beer, a mere 2 litere, and the least alcohol, 1¼ liters. He imbibes 98 liters of wine, however.

CO-OPERATION OF BUTTERMAKER AND PATRON.

E. E. Estel, assistant dairy expert of Iowa, in an article appearing in the Creamery Journal, says on the above subject:

From the most remote times we find that the dairy cow has been a close friend of the man or woman who made her butter-fat into the finished product. In Holland, Denmark and the Guernsey and Jersey Isles the butter was made on the farm and necessarily the buttermaker and the cow were very closely related. In fact it was very seldom, indeed, that the buttermaker and the dairy cow did not sleep under the same roof. I regret very much to see this intimacy between these two almost inseparable parties waning at the present time. In this age of specialization we find the manfucturer and the producer of dairy products drifting further and further apart.

In many instances the dairy cow is hundreds of miles from the factory where her butter fat is converted into butter, and the buttermaker never sees from one year's end to the next a single cow that produces the fat which he handles every day. The creamery is always considered the centre of the dairy industry. Whenever the dairy cow's path leads the creamery sooner or later finds its way. In the case of the smaller creameries that do not operate routes the plant is visited by the farmers of the community once or twice a week and while waiting for their cans to be emptied and washed the patrons have an opportunity to converse with the buttermaker. How much more is accomplished if the latter is interested in what each of his patrons is doing. By hearing the experience of each he can profit and gradually become a benefactor to the dairy industry. It is this promotion of friendship and mutual help that tends to make a success of any line of work, and wherever we find harmony between manufacturer and producer, we are sure to find success.

Probably the closest tie which exists between the creamery patron and the creamery is with reference to the production of clean milk and cream. This intimacy exists because of the fact that it is absolutely impossible to make a high grade of butter from cream that has had improper care on the farm. You are probably aware of the great value of cream and butter for human food if produced in a sanitary way, but you also know that dairy products if handled in an unclean manner are the most dangerous foods that man can consume. The buttermaker who has been schooled all his life in the care and handling of milk and cream can well be considered a worthy adviser and producer. He understands the different fermentations which take place in cream and milk when handled in an improper manner. He can instruct the farmer in regard to the cooling and aerating of cream and milk as quickly as possible after drawn, and explain why it is better to keep the cream, which is only delivered three times a week, in a cold tank of water rather than placing it in a can in the barn or woodshed.

The quality of butter made in a creamery can be determined with considerable certainty by visiting the homes of its patrons. One need not inspect the plant at all to place an approximate score on its product. If we find the patrons milking good, healthy herds, and the milk handled in a sanitary manner, we can at once give the butter a fairly high score. On the other hand, if the cows are dirty and are kept in dark unventilated barns we can conclude that the butter which comes from the factory on the hill, no matter how good the buttermaker or machinery, is not first class and would not be counted among the prize tubs of any scoring contest. If the farmer could be made to understand the importance of these things there would be less occasion for the explosion of cans due to gassy fermentation in the cream. Instead of spending so much time in the factory trying to make good butter out of poor cream it would be much more economical to hire a man to visit the farms as often as possible and improve the raw product which is the real source of poor butter.

However, there are many other ways in which the creameryman is related to the patron. Each creamery must have enough of the raw produce to pay the operating expenses and the necessary dividends. The lack of enough cream to supply the demands is one of the important reasons why we find so many creameries taking an active interest in their patrons. The buttermaker in the small creamery as the field man in the large plant could devote a portion of his time to no better advantage than familiarizing himself with conditions existing in the farms of his patrons. By supplying himself with the best literature on dairying and then spreading this information broadcast among the patrons a great deal of enthusiasm could be aroused.

If this dormant germ of dairying were placed under conditions for growth and then cultivated by the creameries they would undoubtedly receive plenty of good cream. The average dairy farm is conducted no better today than it was fifty years ago. There is a lack of system which, of course means failure rather than success. We often hear the farmer say that dairying is only a side line for him, and therefore, he does not care to waste time upon it. Undoubtedly three-fourths of the cow owners of the state do not know whether their animals are losing them money or bringing them a profit. If they could be made to see the value of the scale and Babcock test in weeding out these robbers of their herds it would mean thousands of dollars to the community.

After disposing of the unprofitable animals the next best thing to do is to improve the offspring of the remainder. This can only be accomplished by the use of a pure bred sire. If the stumbling block "cost," could be removed from the dairyman's mind and he could be made to demand a butter-fat record in purchasing his sires the seriousness of the situation could be greatly relieved. Another important thing for the buttermaker to disseminate among his patrons is the proper feeding and care of their cows. More feed, cheaper feed, milk producing feed and balanced rations are a few of the neglected necessities which should be urged along this line.

It is true that the buttermakers and farmers have taken several steps during the past year to bring them closer together.

THE RELATION OF THE COW TO THE COST OF MILK.

Slowly it is getting established in the conviction of dairy farmers, says Hoard's Dairyman, that the character of the cow has a vast deal to do with the cost of producing milk. At the meeting of the Ohio Milk Producers' Association, which met in Cleveland, this question was well presented. The year's history of several herds was presented and the farmers present considered the pro and con of the matter. The cost of producing milk was shown by the history of various herds to range from 6 to 15 cents a gallon. A herd of 10 cows showed a cost of 15 cents a gallon for the months between April 1st and October 1st. This cost included everything. Another herd of 21 cows cost ten cents a gallon for the same six months. This herd was fed grain in addition to pasture the whole of the time. Twenty-six cows, registered Holsteins, entered in the Western Reserve Cow Testing Association, gave a production of 7,355 pounds of milk per cow at an average cost of feed of $50.97 per cow, and an average total profit of $58.89 per cow. The average return for each $1 spent for feed was $2.16. The above figures were taken from the Ohio Farmer which paper in commenting on these facts says:

"The lowest cost was found in the herds of the Western Reserve Holstein-Friesan association where all the cows are pure bred and have been carefully selected for a number of years. The lower the grade of cow the higher the cost of production, regardless of the method of handling and feeding."

Now these are profitable facts to consider. These facts govern just the same whether we are dairying with one breed of cows or with another.

GRATUITOUS ADVICE.

A man had sat for some time looking thoughtfully at his saucer of melting ice cream. At last he left his chair and made his way to the proprietor.

"I see you advertise that you make your own ice cream," he said in a confidential tone.

"I do sir," said the proprietor.

"Well," said the man, "would you permit me to give you a little pointer? I won't charge you a cent and it will be money in your pocket."

"Glad to hear it, I'm sure," said the proprietor.

ELBERT HUBBARD ON THE GROCER.

Of the grocers of the country Elbert Hubbard says:

The most numerous of all the various divisions of trade is that of the retail grocer.

There are two hundred and fifty thousand retail grocers in America. We cannot eat a meal without first interviewing our grocer. You can omit the preacher, waive the lawyer, but you'll have to send for the doctor unless you deal with the right grocer.

Our lives are literally in his hands.

He supplies the fuel that keeps our vital processes in motion. Just a little of the wrong kind of food and our outlook is disturbed, and the young men carry us out.

"Of all men in my employ the only one with whom I dare not break friendship is my cook," said Frederick The Great. He would better have said "my grocer," for the cook cooks what the grocer provides. Of all the men the retail grocer should be a man of integrity and intelligence.

The grocer has often stood to us as a glib and oily party, who sold us sand for sugar, chicory for coffee, alum for cream of tarter, and axle grease for butter. Then another reason why we have despised him is the ease with which the sheriff has sold him out. He hasn't made enough money to be really respectable and we all recognize that a man hopelessly in debt is dishonest. No man on half rations can tell the truth.

A clergyman does not necessarily minister to society as much as does the grocer, and should not be granted any more privileges and honors.

CREAM AS FOOD.

The following taken from an exchange, signed by Mrs. Anna Hoffarth, contains some good advice.

In speaking of the value of cream I do not mean its value computed in dollars, but rather its value as a food, and as a time and labor saver to the busy housewife. Cream is the very choicest of fats, both as to palatability and ease of assimilation. People with weak digestions can usually digest cream and it is very rarely that we find any one who cannot use cream in some form. A more perfect combination of fat and flesh forming food could hardly be imagined than exists in cream. Persons who cannot take cod liver oil at all can revel in good, pure, wholesome cream. One noted physician has said that if children were allowed all the cream they desired at all times their parents would not have to buy so many bottles of cod liver oil for them later in life.

I have seen busy, tired, overworked farm women carefully save and hoard every ounce of cream as a miser would his gold, in order to increase the number of pounds of butter for sale. With the money received for the butter, canned salmon, sardines and other eatables were purchased for the table.

How much better for the health of the family to have served the cream at every meal, and in as many ways as possible this would have made less work for the housekeeper, by reducing the churning, and less cooking, too. Good bread, butter, fruit and cream in abundance will furnish as dainty, wholesome and palatable a meal as the finest pastry and this leaves the cook enough leisure to rest, read and keep cool. Hence the value of cream is not to be computed in dollars and cents.

SAGO AND TAPIOCA.

It has come to the attention of the Board of Food and Drug Inspection, says one of the trade journals, that there exists among the trade in various parts of the United States, a very general misunderstanding with respect to sago and small pearl tapioca. Sago is prepared from the starch obtained from the pith found in the stem of several species of palm trees, natives of the East Indies and tapioca is prepared by heating in a moist state the starch made from the root of the cassava or tapioca plant, which is indigenous to certain South American countries. Both products ordinarily reach the consumer in granulated form and are designated as "pearl sago," and "pearl tapioca," respectively. While the "pearl sago" and "pearl tapioca" are separate and distinct articles of commerce, each resembles the other closely in appearance and the fine pearl tapioca has frequently been labeled and sold as sago. Under the Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, articles of food are misbranded if the labels or packages contain statements which are false or misleading, or if particular articles are imitations of or are offered for sale under the distinctive name of other articles. In the opinion of the Board, the name "sago" or "pearl sago" without qualification means the product obtained from the pith of the East Indian palm trees, and starch products of different origin will be held to be misbranded under the act if labeled or offered for sale as sago, etc. The prepared product derived from the cassava plant root is tapioca and should be labeled as such.

There is also on the market an imitation sago made from potato starch. Imitation food products are misbranded under the act unless they are labeled so as to indicate plainly that they are imitation products and unless the words "imitation" is also plainly stated on the packages in which imitation products are offered for sale. Potato or other starch prepared to resemble pearl sago, therefore should be labeled, for example, "imitation sago," "made from potato starch." The word "imitation" must appear on the label, but an equivalent expression may be substituted for "made from potato starch" which will indicate unmistakably that the product is not made from the pith of the East Indian palm trees, but is derived from a different source.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

The householder will do well to scan with attention products suspected of cold storage experiences.

Labels do not always tell the truth; nevertheless it is good policy to examine them carefully. Under the National Food and Drugs Act it is always possible for a lying label to get the producer into trouble.

Whenever the nation or the state confronts the deliberate adulterator of food with the prospect of a prison sentence there will be fewer violations of law. The prison has terrors that no fine can produce.

Vinegar seems to be a favorite vehicle of the adulterators. In spite of what has been done by the federal government and some of the states a very considerable percentage of the country's "cider" vinegar never saw any cider.

Ordinary prudence should teach the housekeeper that the only safe food products are those free from doubtful foreign products.

A little poison will kill nobody, unless it be extremely powerful; but account should be taken of the cumulative effect of swallowing it in your food from day to day.

Another practice of the oleomargarine people which is deprecated by the dairymen and farmers is that of labeling their product with a name wholly suggestive of genuine butter.

The cold storage folks are furnishing some convincing evidence against themselves. When they unload upon the market and prices go rapidly down they seem to prove all their critics have been saying.

With millions upon millions of pounds of butter swiftly gathered up and stored away is it any wonder that the butter supply is not ample enough to provide all the people with a generous share at a reasonable price?

Recent events seem to confirm the view of those who have been putting a large share of the responsibility for the high prices of food products on the shoulders of the cold storage managers. They likewise increase the urgency of the popular demand for government supervision of this business. It has its good features as well as its vicious ones. The former should be preserved and strengthened; the latter should be eliminated.

To educate the coming generation in a knowledge of the properties of food products and to familiarize it with the effects of various preservatives will be to add to the length of human life.

Siberia exports nearly 60 per cent. of its entire butter production. Butter factories grow up like mushrooms; in 1909 there were 2,061. Two-thirds of this number are not co-operative, still the product from the co-operative creameries amounts to an average of about 40,000 pounds a month against about 1,500 pounds at the private creameries. The product in one year at the large co-operative creamery at Tomsk was 57,000,000 pounds. Great attention is being given to the large prairies where through developments of the cattle industry large milk production may be developed.

Joel C. Winkjer, of Crookston, is the new dairy and food commissioner of Minnessota, having been appointed by Governor Eberhart. Mr. Winkjer succeeds Andrew French, who, it had been known since election, had no chance of reappointment, although he is one of Minnessota's best commissioners. Mr. Winkjer's appointment, while unlooked for by the dairy and creamerymen, inasmuch as his name had not been mentioned, meets the approval of both the dairymen's and buttermakers' associations and the good work Mr. French has been doing will undoubtedly be carried on and enlarged as conditions change and the state develops.

The British Dairy Farmer's Association, in conference with a select committee from the House of Commons, has agreed that to allow the sale of colored oleomargarine, leaves an open door for fraud and they urge the absolute prohibition of all coloring whereby the substitute "shall imitate butter."

According to the census office in Ottawa the number of milch cows in Canada shows an increase over 1909 of 1.13 per cent. for 1910. The total number of horned cattle, however, showed a decrease of 2.20 per cent. for the same period. The increase for the whole Dominion was made up largely by considerable increases in the western provinces.

In a decision handed down the board of United States general appraisers in New York sustained the protest of the American Express Company and placed fresh cavaire on the free list. Duty was assessed on merchandise in question at the rate of 30 per cent. ad. valorem.

The exports of canned salmon to the Philippine Islands for ten months of 1910, ending with October, amounted in value to $309,520, against $32,404 for the same period in 1909. During the year 1909 the value of salmon shipped from Nova Scotia to European ports aggregated $625,367.

The American Grocer advises: Have an aim in life. Resolve to be somebody—to have a place among men and be worth something to society. The places higher up are always open. They are the hardest to fill and so there is always an incentive to press forward.

According to the American consul at St. John's, Que., the Canadian egg supply does not equal the demand, and importations of Russian and Chinese products are becoming common. In 1902 more than 11½ million dozen of eggs, valued at $1,733,242, were exported. In 1909, a little over a half million dozen, valued at $124,215; this year the exports have been negligible, thus representing a rapid decline.

About 400 retail grocery and provision firms in Greater Boston have discontinued the giving of trading stamps. There are about 20,000 retailers in Boston, the majority of whom, according to Secretary Whitten, of the Retail Merchants' Association of that city, regard the trading stamp as an extortion.

According to the Ohio Farmer the Dairy and Food Commissioner of that state has issued an order which requires that all cream in that state shall be sold by weight and not by the quart as is the general practice. The commissioner states that this will close the door to many frauds that have been practiced by dishonest dealers. The cheat and the swindler we have with us always, no matter what laws we have.

The Bureau of Publicity, Bel Air, Md., which has been investigating a poisoning case at North Yakima, Wash., wherein there were three victims of some kind of poison, which was first blamed on canned asparagus, learns that it was a home product put up in jars with porcelain glass-lined lids.

According to a press report a seaweed has invaded the oyster beds of France and carried off 400,000 oysters. The minute seeds of this weed float up the English channel in the current of the Gulf Stream, settle on oysters in the Breton beds of Morbihan, Quiberon and Belle isle, and they grow to the size of duck eggs. They are full of water, but at maturity the water evaporates and air takes its place. The egg-shaped seaweed is then a balloon, and like a balloon, it lifts its oyster from the bottom and bears it out to sea.

The frog leg industry of Canada, according to a reliable source, is worth to the Province of Quebec at least $100,000 annually. During 1909 the Montreal markets disposed of over $200,000 of frogs' legs of which probably over 50 per cent. were produced in this province. The local market quotations averaged forty cents per pound. There are numerous rivulets and marshes in this province in which frogs abound and during the proper season boys and men earn a fair livlihood catching frogs. Most of the shipments from this consular district go to Boston and New York, usually in small quantities.

It is interesting to note, says the Oysterman, that oysters grow only in the summer, but especially during long warm summers and that they are scarcely big enough for the mouth before the third year. The age of an oyster can be told by the number of humps on the shell, a hump coming on the shell every summer, and a sink every winter; but it is impossible to tell the age of an oyster after the seventh of tenth year, when full growth has come. Oysters easily live to the age of twenty.

For a considerable period there had been coming into this country and into the markets of Pennsylvania a thin cracker called Fru-fru. It is manufactured in Holland and in the particular brand to which objection was finally made in Pennsylvania the white icing between the layers was adulterated. This icing was found to be adulterated with boric acid. As the sale of articles containind this product is contrary to the pure food law of this Commonwealth a few prosecutions were instituted with excellent effect. This particular cracker was not driven out of the market; on the contrary it is still sold here, but the icing between the layers no longer contains boric acid or any other drug.

Consul B. S. Rairden, of Batavia, says that 1,011,508 bamboo and 1,376,000 grass (pandan) hats were among the articles exported from the Dutch East Indies to the United States in the months of July, August and September. Shipments of Tapioca flour aggregated 8,358,382 pounds during this period, and there were also sales of flake and pearl tapioca amounting to 458,449 pounds and 301,728 pounds respectively and 65,829 pounds of tapioca seeds. Black pepper, amounting to 2,936,508 pounds; coffee, 2,784,534 pounds; cassia, 358,210 pounds; rubber, quinine, sugar, nutmegs, gum copal and various other spices and tea figured to a considerable extent in the traffic with the United States during the third quarter of 1910.

The agents of the bureau are now working on a general line of food commodities. During the month of January they purchased a large quantity of all kinds of food products and condiments in various sections of the State. These are now in the hands of the bureau's chemists who are analyzing them. In due time the result will be announced. We shall be greatly surprised if the facts do not redound to the credit of the manufacturers and dealers who cater to the people of Pennsylvania. During last year the examinations of staple groceries have shown a very happy condition of affairs. Very few prosecutions having been necessary. Practically all the manufacturers are obeying the law.

The health of the people of this Commonwealth is very largely in the hands of the manufacturers and venders of those articles of food which are universally recognized as the necessities of life. The State recognizes the immense importance of pure food and provides by law for the regulation of the manufacture and sale of all such articles. Certain provisions are made for the enforcement of the law and the punishment of those who are indifferent or careless. It is a very great pleasure to the people and their representatives when prosecutions are few and far between. For that means that good food is being furnished by the manufacturers.

It is a singular thing that so many persons are tempted to engage in the manufacture of "cider vinegar" that does not contain even a trace of cider. And, singularly enough, a goodly number of persons are deceived into buying the fictitious article when Pennsylvania has a special law providing ample encouragement for those who wish to manufacture real cider vinegar. Yes, there's room for reform here.

OPINION ATTORNEY GENERAL ELKIN JANUARY 29, 1896.

COFFEE CANNOT BE SOLD, AS A COMPOUND WHICH CONTAINS CHICORY, RYE, WHEAT, PEAS AND OTHER CEREALS OR PRODUCTS, UNDER THE PROVISO TO SECTION 3 OF THE ACT OF JUNE 26th, A. D. 1895, (P. L. 317).

"The question involved is one of great importance in the construction of the provisions of the Pure Food Law. As I am informed, a firm imports teas, coffees and spices, and, in order to make a cheaper grade of coffee, a certain amount of chicory, wheat, rye, peas, etc., is dried, browned and ground with pure coffee. The mixture thus prepared is sold on the market under a label, "Best Rio," "Prime Rio," "French Rio," or "Broken Java." It is earnestly contended that the proviso to section 3, of the act above referred to, gives them the right to sell such a mixture or compound without incurring the penalties of the law. Acting upon this idea, certain labels containing the words "Coffee Compound," and showing that it is a mixture of prime coffee, English chicory and choice grain, are exhibited for the purpose of securing your approval so that this "Coffee Compound" may be sold in our State without interference from those in charge of the enforcement of the law.

I have no hesitancy in saying that, if such a preparation can be sold under the law as coffee, the label is sufficent under the proviso above named. But I am of the opinion that the proviso does not cover an article of food known as "Coffee Compound" such as intended to be sold by this firm, and that any manufacturing for sale, offering for sale, or selling of the same as an article of food, would be in violation of the very letter and spirit of the act referred to.

Section 3 of the Pure Food Law defines what an adulteration is within the meaning of the act of Assembly. Any article of food shall be considered adulterated, "1. If any substance or substances have been mixed with it so as to lower or depreciate or injuriously affect its quality, strength or purity. 2. If any inferior or cheaper substance or substances have been substituted wholly or in part for it. 3. If any valauble or necessary constituent or ingredient has been wholly or in part abstracted from it." These are but three of the seven kinds of adulteration named in the act. Either one of these three definitions is sufficient to brand the "Coffee Compound," offered for sale by the firm, as an adulteration. The addition of chicory, wheat, rye or peas to coffee depreciates its "quality, strength and purity." It is a substitution, in part, of a cheaper substance to take the place of coffee, and it could very properly be said that in such a compound a valuable constituent has been in part, abstracted from it, for part of the coffee is taken away, and a cereal substituted therefor. If the "quality, strength, or purity" of coffee can thus be depreciated under the authority of the proviso to section 3 of the above act, then is the Pure Food Law a legislative dream. If this can be done, then any adulterated article could be sold by simply marking it a compound or mixture. Allspice ground with buckwheat hulls, or cinnamon with hemlock bark, could then be labeled "compound" and sold in the open markets as such. Such a construction would render the act of 1895 a nullity.

The Pure Food Law was intended to provide against the adulteration of articles of food, and to prevent deception and fraud in the sale thereof. The legislation was much needed, and it should be enforced in such a way as to give the greatest security to the public consistent with the requirements of the act. It is true that the proviso to section 3, above mentioned, says that it "shall not apply to mixtures or compounds recognized as ordinary articles or ingredients of articles of food." It is difficult to give any general definition of an "ordinary article of food," that would apply in all cases. It is, however, a fair presumption that no article of food, adulterated within the meaning of the definition of section 3, is intended to be exempted by the proviso. The proviso is designed to cover a different class of cases. Any one relying upon the proviso to exempt him from the penalties of the law takes upon himself the laboring oar and the burden of proof is upon him to make out the exemption claimed. What is an "ordinary article of food," within the meaning of the proviso, must depend upon the facts in each particular case. I am clearly of the opinion, however, that coffee, adulterated by the addition of chicory, wheat, rye or peas, is not an "ordinary article of food" intended to be exempted from the penalties of the law. On the other hand, it is an adulteration, and cannot be sold without offending against the provisions of the Pure Food Law.

DAIRYING IN DENMARK.

The following paper was prepared by Arthur J. Bill for the Illinois Farmers' Institute and may possess some points of interest for Pennsylvania dairymen:

In no other country does everything give place to dairying as it does in Denmark and Holland, and in no other country in the world are the farmers so prosperous and self-respecting. There must be great opportunities ahead of the American dairymen if Denmark can profitably feed our grain and maintain, through dairy exports, her place as one of the most thrifty nations of the world. These are great statements by Professor Wilbur J. Fraser and Mr. Royden E. Brand, of the Illinois College of Agriculture, as their convictions from a first hand study of European dairy farms last summer. Here are some of their details:

The aim of the Danish farmer is to keep the largest number of efficient cows possible on a given area, a cow to 2½ acres or less. Enough young stock is raised to keep the herd supplied with cows.

From their feeding of cake and meal and the stall feeding of green crops, an immense amount of manure of fine quality is made and with their careful methods of husbanding the solids in a covered manure pit and the liquids in a cistern, and applying in small quantities at frequent intervals during the rotation, the producing power of their land is increasing from year to year. Both the Danish red cow and the black and white cow of Jutland are distinctively dairy cows and are good producers.

The development of the breeds to such a high degree in twenty-five years has been due to the farmers' skill, intelligence and common sense in selecting and breeding for milk production alone. The price of cows is $80 to $90. Only the best heifers are raised, and with the record of the dam and the qualities of the sire known, their selection is comparatively simple. The cows are treated with kindness and every effort is made to have them comfortable at all times. On many farms the cows are regularly groomed.

The soiling crops used are rye, oats and peas, oats and vetch and clover and grass. These are hauled to the barn and fed green, or pastured off by tethering the cows along the edge. In some sections of small farms all the land is under cultivation.

In the cool European countries the soiling season of the crop is much longer. The cows are seldom turned to pasture in Denmark, but tethered by means of a halter to the head and a rope or chain twelve to twenty feet long, which is attached to a ten-inch pin driven into the ground. The cows are moved five times a day, from three to six feet, depending upon the amount of feed. Thus the crops are grazed off, even when two or three feet high, without waste from tramping. This is the Danes' chief point of economy in summer feed. Practically no grain is fed while cows are on grass. A few dairymen feed a little oil cake to their best milkers.

Water is hauled twice a day to the tethered cows. Many small dairymen take the cows to the stable to be milked three times a day. They are stabled all winter, fed all the straw they will eat and on the average four pounds of hay, forty to one hundred pounds of roots, and about six pounds of grain per day, consisting of oil cakes, bran, barley and oats.

An even flow of milk is required the year around, and most of the cows freshen from September to May.

The co-operative cow-testing associations, begun in 1895, have proven so helpful in weeding out the unprofitable cows, that they have rapidly increased to 500 associations. A man is employed by each association to visit the farms and do the testing every three weeks. He weighs the milk and keeps an accurate record of the feed consumed, so the net profit per year of each individual cow can be ascertained. By raising the future herd from the best cows the average production has been greatly increased. The system of feed and milk records has been a prime factor.

Two Copenhagen milk companies handle over 100,000 pounds of milk a day, all of which is produced under veterinary inspection and in accordance with strict rules laid down by the company. Inspectors see that every producer lives up to these rules, which require cleanliness at every step. As soon as drawn, the milk must be cooled and kept below 50 degrees Fahrenheit; the slightest off flavor may cause the bottling plant to refuse the milk. Then it is pasteurized at 180 degrees, cooled to below 50 degrees and put into small-necked bottles sealed with corks or expanded pulp covers.

Milk sold in bulk is sent out in large sealed cans from which it may be drawn only through a faucet, over which must appear a statement of its quality. In this way skim, one-half skim, whole milk and cream may be put out by the same wagon at prices varying according to the quality without danger of the purchaser being defrauded. But all this milk is of the same high sanitary standard. Thirty pounds of ice must be provided for every eleven gallons of milk produced.

There are 1,100 co-operative and 300 private creameries in Denmark. These manufacture over 200,000,000 pounds of butter a year, 80 per cent. of which is exported to Great Britain. In summer the milk is delivered twice a day and in winter once.

Stringent rules are laid down in regard to cooling the milk on the farm and in not mixing morning's and night's milk. All foods which may impart an objectionable flavor to the milk are forbidden.

The creameries are compelled by law to pasteurize all skim milk by heating to 180 degrees before it leaves the creamery, to prevent the spread of tuberculosis through this medium. The loyalty of the Danes makes it rarely, if ever, necessary to impose the penalties. The skim milk is converted into bacon hogs and the bacon exported to England.

The secret of the Danish butter-makers' success lies largely in their habits of thoroughness. They first construct a sanitary building and then keep it clean by daily scrubbing. This applies equally well to all the machinery and apparatus in the creamery. They have milk delivered to the creamery in almost ideal condition. Another secret is that they study their business thoroughly, becoming very proficient, as they expect to remain at this occupation for their life work. Thus they turn out a product of uniformly high quality which is the chief factor in their success with an export trade.

WORK OF THE DAIRY AND FOOD BUREAU.

In an interview concerning the work of the Dairy and Food Bureau during the year 1910, and published in many newspapers, Commissioner Foust said that the records shows certain facts of special interest with regard to the distribution of this work through the several sections of the State. It is everywhere true, he remarked, that the concentration of the work follows very closely the concentration of population; that is, it is in cities, where people produce practically none of their own foods and where commercial products more nearly ready for consumption, are especially sought, and where the variety of food preparations offered for sale is greatest, that the greatest variety and most frequent cases of adulteration and misbranding appear. In smaller towns and in the country communities, on the other hand, food is more largely produced by the consumer and even when purchased is bought more largely in the raw state; so that under these conditions the instances of adulteration and misbranding show a smaller proportion than in the densely populated districts to the total number of articles used upon the table or in the kitchen preparation of foods.

Among the larger cities Pittsburg, and the county of Allegheny, exhibited in 1910 a most interesting showing. In that hive of industry with its great variety of labor and of nationalities represented among consumers a remarkably great variety of foods appears in the markets, and this variety exists not only in the classes of food products, but also in their grades. The Commissioner adds that some idea of the activity in the Pittsburg district may be gained from the number of the cases terminated and the fines collected during the past year as compared with the corresponding totals for the entire State. The total number of cases terminated in Pennsylvania for 1910 was 671 and of these the Pittsburg district contributed 281, or almost one-half. The total fines and costs collected in Pennsylvania on account of these cases was $30,000 out of which $14,000 was collected in Pittsburg and Allegheny county.

Among the most interesting classes of cases terminated in the Pittsburg district were those for the sale of bad eggs, "the rots and spots," in which the average fines imposed were $200. In this district also were instituted the first cases against dealers selling wormy and decomposed nuts and while some of the fines imposed in this new class of cases were not large the general quality of these commodities now offered for sale shows a very marked improvement over the condition existing before this work was begun. The Pittsburg district has also had a large number of successful prosecutions against adulterators of sausage, chiefly on the ground of adulteration by the substitution of cheap and inferior cereals and especially water for the high priced meats which the consumer had a right to expect and, the Commissioner added, there is another class of cases in which the Pittsburg district has been particularly successful, namely: those brought for the sale of pie-fillers containing fruits adulterated with benzoate of soda and of so-called "ice cream powders," in which the poisonous principal of soap-bark was present as an important and active ingredient.

The Commissioner expressed the belief that in this important district public sentiment was coming more and more strongly to the support of the State Food Laws and gave as grounds for this belief the active support of the public press, the favorable attitude of the juries and the enactment by the councils of Pittsburg into the body of their municipal laws of the several State Food Laws and the regulations issued thereunder. The Commissioner feels that the public of that district owes a special debt of gratitude for zealous and effective work to the four special agents. Messrs. D. B. Miller, agent in charge, A. Billings, J. J. Jamison and F. J. Whalen, the chemist, Dr. F. T. Aschman and special counsel, H. W. McIntosh, by whom this work was performed.

The Commissioner stated that in Philadelphia also a very considerable number of cases had been concluded, among which those for the sale of bad eggs and of confectionery containing sulphites had attracted particular attention. The Commissioner is gratified with the public support which the work of the Food Bureau is receiving also in this greatest centre of population of the Commonwealth.

The work, too, in the central and rural portions of the State, and also the mining regions, had been actively conducted by the special agents in charge of these districts and the general proportion of convictions obtained to cases instituted is such as to indicate a live interest in the food work on the part of the public concerned, although, as before indicated, the number of cases in proportion to the population affected is less than appears in the larger cities.

SELLING ROTTEN EGGS.

The Retailers' Journal, one of the best edited trade journals in the country, in a recent discussion of the rotten egg problem indulged in the following remarks: "Regardless of the numerous prosecutions that have been secured in different parts of the country by agents of the Pure Food Department of the Federal Department of Agriculture, there continues to bob up instances, frequently of late, of additional seizures of rotten eggs which had been offered for sale to bakers, candy makers and the like, which shows the daring of those engaged in that nefarious traffic. It would seem that drastic measures should be meted out to the class of men who knowingly handle this stuff, and who, as a rule, formerly sought to dispose of it to tanners, who can properly make use of spoiled eggs in the tanning processes of certain kinds of fine skins; but the sharks who deal in the stuff at first hands, finding that they could receive a considerably greater price for this article from crooked bakers and others, switched to the more remunerative source of consumption.

"The sale and use of desiccated eggs is both legitimate and long recognized, but there is a vast difference between the properly graded desiccated egg and the putrid article that has of late very often been substituted for the same, and also, by the way, quite a difference in cost to the purchaser. Hence the risk that many of these unscrupulous small manufacturers will take for the purpose of saving a mere pittance at best.

"It may be said in passing, that it is highly improbable that there is at this day, any reputable manufacturer of a food product in which this kind of an article could be utilized, who would debase himself by making use of the same in the preparation of his product. Still not so long ago, a medium-sized cracker concern was discovered to be making use of rotten and wormy figs (such stuff as could find no place in the market), by a federal inspector.

"So long as the almighty dollar has more charm for some grades of men than honor and probity in business, it behooves both the State Federal and food authorities to be ever watchful, and it is likely to so continue even unto the millenium."

The Retailers' Journal expresses the sentiments of all honest bakers, we are sure. There is something indescribably revolting in the idea of persons who are trusted by the consuming public using eggs that are fit for no food use to prepare cakes for market. The result to the innocent consumer is always a matter of doubt. It requires a person with a dead conscience and a depraved heart to deal in eggs such as have been described and which do very well for tanning purposes but are entirely out of place in a normal human stomach.

This Bulletin is pleased to say that the legislature of 1909 placed upon the statue books of Pennsylvania a drastic law concerning this hideous traffic in rotten eggs. Under its provisions some violators of law have been arrested and punished. There is some reason to suspect, however, that the business has not been entirely broken up. If determination and unceasing vigilance can prevent the indulgence of the greed that seeks to profit by such a traffic the business will not long flourish on the soil of this State.

THE LEGAL DEFINITION OF THE WORD ALUM.

Herewith we give portions of a letter to Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust from Lyman D. Gilbert, A. H. Woodward and E. E. Beidleman, counsel for the Commonwealth in the case of Commonwealth vs. Myer Gross, charged with selling baking powder containing added alum:

In the above case a verdict of guilty was rendered against the defendant, which was subsequently set aside by Judge Smith, Specially Presiding Trial-Judge, in an opinion delivered June 1, 1910.

In that opinion, the Court found as a fact that:

> "It is clear, not only from the testimony offered, but from the written authority of dictionaries and chemistries, that there is a well-founded difference of opinion as to the word 'alum' and just what substance the said word does include. * * * In this case it appears from the practically uncontradicted evidence, and the jury have so found, that the substance in the baking powder in question is a mixture or compound of sodium sulphate and aluminium sulphate anhydrous, that is, > without the water of crystallization. This substance is known to the chemical trade, according to the evidence in the case, as S. A. S., meaning sodium aluminium sulphate. Had the Legislature intended the construction contended for by the Commonwealth, it certainly would have been easy to have used words clearly covering the point which it now attempts to include. Had the word been used in the plural even, much less doubt as to what was meant could have arisen. The use of the word aluminium sulphates would clearly have covered the substance here used. We conclude, therefore, that the context of the act sustains the contention of the defendant.

>
> "We are convinced, therefore, that the disputed definition of the word 'alum' could not have been known to the Legislature as inclusive of S. A. S., or words would have been used so as to cover the intended substance admittedly used in baking powder. We believe, therefore, that the Legislature did not have in mind S. A. S. baking powder as an evil to be remedied.
>
> "The statute in controversy is a penal statute, which, as a rule, are to be strictly construed. * * * The words of this act must be construed with reference to the Legislative intent. What then was intended by the use of the word 'alum'? Should it be construed as widely as is contended by the Commonwealth? We think not. No word in a penal Act of Assembly should be the subject of such extraordinary testimony. If 'alum' is a distinctive substance, and only known as such to common and not scientific people, it is fair to assume that that only was meant. The construction widening the word 'alum' to include other and distinct substances, which may be called 'the alums,' is entirely too indefinite and doubtful in a penal statute. Such construction invokes liberality not to be commended in any statute. * * * At best, not only the testimony, but all of the written authority defining alum, consulted by the Court, leads us to doubt whether alum, singular, can be construed to include the substances known as S. A. S., admittedly a constituent part of the baking powder in controversy.
>
> "For the above reasons, therefore, we believe we are in error in our construction of the word 'alum' at the trial, from which it follows that the defendant was entitled to a verdict of not guilty."

An appeal was subsequently taken by the Commonwealth to the Superior Court.

Before incurring the expense of printing the testimony taken on the trial of this case, which consumed more than three days, and of preparing and printing the paper-book to be used in the Superior Court, we have, with great care, considered the evidence and the two judicial opinions above mentioned.

The result of our examination is this:

We do not think it is probable we can obtain a reversal in this case, based upon an interpretation of the statutory meaning of the word "alum." If that opinion is correct, then plainly, the defendant has not violated the statute, and the Superior Court need consider no other question than that in disposing of this appeal.

There is, therefore, nothing, so far as we can see, for judicial review upon this feature of this case.

Its position, as left by the Trial-Judge, is this:

(1) This act is constitutional so far as this defendant is concerned.

(2) The statutory word "alum" does not include "sodium aluminium sulphate," which the jury found was the substance in the baking powder in question.

The Commonwealth cannot dispute that the act is constitutional, for that is precisely what it claims; and, therefore, that part of the judicial decision is not in question.

The Commonwealth cannot impeach the finding of the jury as to the substance contained in the baking powder in question; neither can it, in our opinion, successfully contend that the substance found in the baking powder is "alum" in the statutory meaning of that word.

For these reasons, the prosecution of this appeal would be of no advantage to the Commonwealth, and would impose a needless expense upon it; and our advice is that the Commonwealth should permit this appeal to be non-prossed.

Commenting upon the above letter, Commissioner Foust said:

> "Upon advice of counsel the position of the Dairy and Food Commissioner will be to accept the decision of Judge Smith as to the definition of alum."

PROGRESS IN THE RIGHT DIRECTION.

Ten years ago sixty per cent. of the food commodities purchased and analyzed by the Dairy and Food Bureau of Pennsylvania were found to be adulterated or misbranded. During the year 1910 the percentage of adulteration did not exceed from three to five of the whole. It is true the percentage of prosecution far exceeded the foregoing figures, but that was due to arrests for adulteration of non-alcoholic drinks or ice cream, selling rotten eggs, or watered or skimmed milk, all of which came under special acts passed by the legislature of 1909, and did not come under the general food law.

In 1903, 600 dairymen were arrested in the various cities and towns throughout the Commonwealth for selling milk that had been preserved by the use of formaldehyde or boric acid. Last summer samples of milk were lifted in all sections of the State, not once but repeatedly, and but a single dairyman was found using formaldehyde. All the other samples were found to be absolutely free from adulteration of any sort. As milk is a staple of life, absolutely essential to the existence of small children, it is very gratifying to be able to make such a report.

The fact that the majority of manufacturers are really anxious to comply with the requirements of the National and State pure food acts is indicated by the increasing purity of the various food products put upon the market. In the olden time many manufacturers used various adulterants because they were ignorant of the properties of the preservatives employed. After scientific investigation opened their eyes they undertook to follow safer and more modern methods. It is very gratifying to those charged with the administration of law in this State, to observe the increasing carefulness of many manufacturers and the commendable desire of retail merchants to provide their patrons with goods containing no injurious ingredient. And it is only fair to presume that the progress already made is merely indicative of what is to come.

We do not suppose the time will ever arrive when all manufacturers and dealers will take special pains to acquaint themselves with the various provisions of the general and special food laws; so long as human nature is the imperfect thing it now is, that would be almost too much to hope for. Some men seem to be born crooked. They are "as prone to do evil as the sparks are to fly upward." They seem to be unhappy so long as they are traveling along the beaten path of good citizenship. Hence the necessity for eternal vigilance and exhaustless investigation by the officers of the State; hence the annual arrests and trials and convictions. Some men seem to be dreadfully unhappy unless they are striving to cheat the State out of its own; nor does disastrous and expensive experience teach them wisdom; always they are of the same mind; always their hands are raised against the State and its laws.

What a satisfaction it is to realize that the chronic violator of the food laws is in such a small minority; what a pleasure it is to feel that the outlaw ranks are becoming thinner and thinner with the flight of time. We may never attain perfection of administration here, but we may earnestly strive after it.

TABLE SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust has directed that a careful investigation of the table syrups and molasses on sale in the Commonwealth shall be made. The method of vending these food materials has greatly changed in recent years. Formerly, syrups and molasses were delivered to the consumer chiefly from the original barrels or casks, but today these articles are more largely sold in cans or bottles filled at the factory. Formerly, the materials were quite simple in nature, now they are largely mixtures or so-called blends made up from a great variety of sweetening substances.

It is the purpose to make the most complete examination of these commodities, which are sold under a great variety of brand names, and it is expected that when the study shall have been completed, it will constitute the most extensive work done upon this subject, whether by any State or by the National Government, since the change in selling methods, above mentioned, has occurred.

The samples, 125 in number, representing that many brands, including those of maple syrup, have been purchased by special agent C. C. Linton in the principal cities of the State, and submitted to Dr. William Frear, of State College, who will conduct their examination. The chief object of the investigation is to ascertain the present character of these important table articles, and when the examination has been completed the results will be published in bulletin form for the general information of the people. The samples and labels under which they were sold, will, however, be studied with reference to the occurrence of adulteration and misbranding and where either of these violations appears, prosecutions will be instituted against the vendors.

THERE'S DANGER IN CHEAP GOODS.

This Bulletin has frequently warned the consuming public that there is likely to be danger lurking in phenomenally cheap food products. It is not an advocate of wanton extravagance; it does not believe in purchasing expensive articles simply for the sake of being singular; but it is pretty well convinced that a good quality of food will fetch a fair price. Here is a case in point, illustrating the danger arising from too cheap foods:

Recently the federal government confiscated a large consignment of so-called canned tomatoes. The goods were put up in cans covered by highly ornate and florid labels, intended to strike the eye and were sold at the attractive price of 5 cents a can. As the average housewife is won by a "bargain" these goods soon commanded a large sale, going into thousands of homes. Five cents a can for tomatoes that were enclosed in so very beautiful a container was a price that could not be resisted. And so the goods continued to sell well.

Nevertheless, the suspicions of the agents of the general government were aroused and an investigation was ordered. Some of the goods were purchased and put through the test which reveals all things concerning the composition of food products. It did not take long to discover that these "perfectly lovely" cans did not contain tomatoes at all, but the waste of the canneries. Further investigation not only showed that the contents of the can were unfit for human food, but also that the canneries in which this refuse was put up were in a very unsanitary condition while the work was done in a decidedly unsanitary way.

There is every reason to believe that many of the persons who partook of these very cheap "tomatoes" were made sick by the dose. Physicians were undoubtedly sent for; perhaps some undertakers found employment because of this rascally method of deceiving the public. The cheapest foods to buy are the best. The most expensive foods are often the cheapest. It doesn't take long for a doctor's bill to grow. A five cent can of refuse from a cannery, sold as tomatoes, plus the family doctor's bill may make a big vacancy in the pocket of the head of the household.

The agents of the Dairy and Food Bureau have been instructed to keep their eyes open for this sort of food products. They have been instructed to purchase samples of food products that appear to be exceptionally cheap and to forward them to the Bureau's chemists. If it be found that dealers are selling such worse than worthless products somebody will surely get into trouble. About the most despicable thing any human being can do is to deliberately impose upon the confiding householder and his family filthy and unwholesome preparations under the guise of genuine food. The average consumer has neither the time nor the ability to analyze the various articles of food that come into his house from day to day. He is obliged to depend upon the honesty of the manufacturer and the retailer. If either deceive him he is in a wretched condition until the State comes to his relief and brings the guilty before the judgment bar. And this ought to be done very promptly.

OYSTERS, FISH AND TURTLES.

According to the Oysterman and Fisherman, a publication which we read with interest and which ably represents the oyster and fish interests, epicures agree that to get the proper flavor, any oyster should be eaten raw from the half shell. Buying in the shell, too, is to some extent a guarantee of purity.

A petition is being circulated throughout Maine, asking the Legislature of that State to amend the law regulating the measurement of lobsters with a view to change the present requirement of 10½ inches in length to 9, or to make the Maine law similar to that ruling in Massachusetts.

That the future of the oyster industry in Louisiana depends upon the abolition of dredge boats is the contention of President Frank M. Miller, of the Board of Commissioners for the Protection of Birds, Game and Fish, of that state.

Arrangements have been made for shipping of frozen turtles from Queenstown to London. It is expected that they will sell for about 25 cents each. These turtles are found in great numbers along the Great Barrier reef, off the coast of Queensland.

During the year 1910 the output of canned lobsters by the Eastern Provinces of Canada amounted to about 10,000,000 cans, valued at $3,000,000.

The oyster experts of the State of North Carolina have been holding a meeting which was also attended by experienced men from Virginia. The purpose of the meeting was to look over the ground and devise ways and means for improving the oyster situation.

Owing to the failure of the United States codfish and the greatly increased demand for cod in the western states, Newfoundland has reaped the benefit of greatly increased prices, as much as $6.90 having been paid. One firm from the United States bought 3,000,000 pounds of salt bulk cod on the south coast.

Dr. Caswell Grave, of the Maryland Shellfish Commission, says: "There are approximately 200,000 acres of natural oyster bars in Maryland and only 3,390 acres planted beds—not 2 per cent. of the whole. The natural beds are leased in the tributaries only in 10 acre lots and in the open bay only 100 acres to one man."

Gloucester fish interests claim that the season has been a remarkably good one. They say reports from St. John's, Newfoundland, to the effect that the herring catch was a failure are not true.

Nearly 20,000 cases of salmon were put up at Aberdeen, Washington, during the season. This is the largest pack ever handled by the Gray's Harbor packers.

In answer to the singular question, "Is it possible for an oyster to sing?" Dr. Charles A. Noriet, formerly of the New Orleans Marine Hospital service, writes the Item of that city that it certainly is. Whereupon Mr. L. J. Dossman, superintendent of the oyster department of the Louisiana Game Commission, admits that it is possible if an oyster can smile and wink. But Dr. Noriet, solemnly, emphatically and with much intensity averts, asserts and asseverates that oysters, supposed to be deaf, dumb and blind do sing. In this connection it may be recalled that a Norfolk newspaper man claims to have heard a school of whales off Cape Henry singing a tune which he says resembled "In the Sweet Bye and Bye."

SODIUM BENZOATE AND MINCE MEAT.

The attention of retail grocers is urgently directed to the fact that the law of this Commonwealth requires that all goods containing sodium benzoate must have an announcement to that effect upon each separate package sold. In the preparation of mince meat, for example, the law permits the use of one-tenth of one per cent. of benzoate of soda, but the fact must be announced upon the container in which the goods is received from the manufacturer or jobber and, in addition, must be placed upon each and every package sold by the retail dealer. The announcement that the package contains benzoate of soda must be in letters not smaller than six point brevier type.

Many retailers, it is to be feared who handle mince meat have fallen into the error of supposing that the label on the original package is sufficient. They should remember that every time a package of mince meat containing this preservative goes out of their store, no matter how small, it should contain such a label as has just been described. Its absence may mean prosecution and the imposition of a considerable penalty.

Of course, this only applies to mince meat containing benzoate of soda. Four-fifths of the mince meat sold by the retail dealers of Pennsylvania contains none of this preservative. It is unnecessary to label it. Analysis of that quality of mince meat would be followed by no evil consequences to the dealer. Let us hope, however, that great care will be taken concerning the sale of the other sort.

REAL OYSTERS, NO WATER.

Long ago the customers of church oyster suppers used to pretend that the oyster stews they purchased from the fair managers of the suppers were like the play of "Hamlet" with the part of Hamlet omitted. They pretended they couldn't find any oysters, or if they did rake up one they pretended that it had come to an untimely end out of sheer loneliness. Then the ladies would accuse the dealer from whom the purchase had been made of having sold them large quantities of water and very few oysters.

Such subterfuges will be available no longer in Pennsylvania. The prosecutions that were instituted during the past several months against dealers who were guilty of the offense of selling oysters containing added water has already practically broken up the practice. The consumer can go to almost any grocery now and buy solid oysters instead of a more than liberal allowance of water as was the case everywhere not long ago. If retail dealers will simply exercise an ordinary amount of precaution there will be no need for further prosecutions.

DAIRY COWS GAIN MUCH IN VALUE.

There has been a wonderful advance in the quality of dairy cattle during the last few years. The various breeds are improving and there are more big records now than ever before. Splendid records were made during the World's Fair in Chicago, but the succeeding generation of cows did much better at St. Louis exposition. We have a number of cows today that can do much better than the holders of the old time records that stood for years, says H. B. Rowe, Chief of Dairy Division of Animal Industry.

The present system of test records is the cause of most of the recent developments. We have the ring show where the animals are judged on appearance, and in addition there are the yearly records that tell the productive capacity of the cow. The cow of today is far superior to the animal of the same breed twenty or thirty years ago, as her capacity and effectiveness are much greater. Without the use of the accurate records many a dairyman would be deceived in the value of his cows. By means of records we are able to weed out the poorer individuals of the different breeds and the result is becoming apparent with remarkable rapidity. One of the most important features of modern dairying is the building up of herds by crossing with highly productive stock. Grade cows or those that are partly of high grade stock are exceedingly valuable as producers. The improvement in dairy conditions has been gradual, but not nearly as rapid as we wish. Some of the dairymen have not taken advantage of what is now within easy reach. There is still much room for improvement in general conditions.

SKIM MILK AS FOOD.

Freshness and cleanliness of skim milk must be considered as well as its composition. Milk which has been received from the milkman and allowed to stand long enough to skim should probably never be given to children under two years of age. For older people the mere fact of its being old should not be taken into consideration. If skim milk is bought as such, however, it should be thoroughly cooked, unless it is known to have been carefully handled and to be clean. Skim milk seems to some people to be rather thin for use as a beverage, but others value it for this very quality. If it is allowed to stand until it sours and is then beaten until the curd is broken into small particles, it makes a familiar and wholesome drink, often used under the name of buttermilk, for much of the commercial buttermilk is thus made from skim milk, some cream or butter fat being sometimes added. For cooking the lack of fat and the absence of flavor can easily be made up, as butter or less expensive fats can be used with it. Pork and bacon make a particularly savory addition. In the very interesting experiment of serving penny lunches to anemic children in the Boston schools, one of the combinations of food that it was found possible to sell for the low price of one cent was skimmed milk and bread and butter. Though not much different in nutritive value, buttermilk obtained as a by-product of butter making has a different quality or texture and a different flavor from so-called skim milk buttermilk referred to above.

COFFEE SHOPS VS. PUBLIC HOUSES.

The United Kingdom is becoming sober, according to the investigations of Consul General John L. Griffiths, at London, says The Spice Mill. In England and Wales the convictions for drunkenness in 1909 decreased nearly 10 per cent. from 1908; in Scotland, outside of Scottish towns 19 per cent.; in Scottish towns, 27 per cent.; in Ireland 8 per cent. One reason for the falling off in the consumption of intoxicants in 1909 was doubtless, says the consul general, the increased price of whisky, due to an advance in duties; but when full weight has been given to this consideration the fact remains that there has been in recent years a manifest increase in sobriety in all classes of the population, especially in England. The workingman frequents more and more the coffee shops, where coffee and cocoa are sold, and a palatable meal can be secured for a very small sum. He is evidently becoming convinced that a cup of warm, aromatic coffee, that may not be genuine mocha and Java but, nevertheless, a true good coffee, is more pleasing to his "innards" than a hooker of cheap so-called whisky, which is very likely not whisky at all but a decoction of unholy chemicals.

COFFEE IN COFFEE HOUSES AND HOTELS.

Investigations as to the constitution of the coffee beverage, as served in hotels, coffee houses, etc., have been conducted in Berlin by Dr. Strunk. The quality and excellence of coffee, says the Kolonialwaren Zeitung, as is well known, determine by a constituent, the so-called caffeine, that in a pure state in moderate quantities is a valuable stimulant. The remaining constituents of coffee, the tannic acid, etc., are of no importance as regards its quality. In addition coffee contains strong smelling, aromatic substances that impart to the beverage coffee its characteristic odor, and of which a single drop suffices to diffuse the coffee smell throughout large spaces.

In one cup of coffee prepared from about eight grammes of coffee beans there will be found .01 gramme of caffeine so that the coffee can be readily tested as to its quality by determining the quantity of caffeine it contains. Dr. Strunk found that the best and strongest coffee was obtained in the first class hotels, the cup showing in this case 0.11 gramme of caffeine, being therefore above the average. Mocha contains 0.12 gramme of caffeine. Compared with this a weak coffee was served in the Berliner Volkskueche with 0.01 gramme of caffeine, while that in the students' dwellings, showing 0.02 gramme of caffeine was not much better. Approximately as much caffeine as in the students' coffee is contained in the solutions made from extracts according to direction. So-called "caffeineless coffee" from a coffee house still contained 0.04 gramme of caffeine; on the other hand home-made coffee contained 0.01 per cent, of caffeine.

HOME PASTEURIZATION OF MILK.

L. A. Rogers, bacterologist of the Dairy Division, Bureau of Animal Industry, gives the following on the above subject in Farmers' Bulletin 413:

Milk is most conveniently pasteurized in the bottles in which it is delivered. To do this use a small pail with a perforated false bottom. An inverted pie tin with a few holes punched in it will answer the purpose. This will raise the bottles from the bottom of the pail, thus allowing a free circulation of water and preventing bumping of the bottles. Punch a hole through the cap of one of the bottles and insert a thermometer. The ordinary floating type of thermometer is likely to be inaccurate, and if possible a good thermometer with the scale etched on the glass should be used. Set the bottles of milk in the pail and fill the pail with water nearly to the level of the milk. Put the pail on the stove or over a gas flame and heat it until the thermometer in the milk shows not less than 150 degrees or more than 155 degrees F. The bottles should then be removed from the water and allowed to stand from twenty to thirty minutes. The temperature will fall slowly, but may be held more uniformly by covering the bottles with a towel. The punctured cap should be replaced with a new one, or the bottle covered with an inverted cup. After the milk has been held as directed, it should be cooled as quickly as possible by setting in water. To avoid danger of breaking the bottles by a too sudden change in temperature, this water should be warm at first. Replace the warm water slowly with cold. After cooling the milk should in all cases be held at the lowest available temperature. This method may be employed to retard the souring of milk or cream for ordinary uses. It should be remembered, however, that pasteurization does not destroy all bacteria in milk, and after pasteurization it should be kept cold and in a cleanly manner and used as soon as possible. Cream does not rise as rapidly or separate as completely in pasteurized milk as in raw milk.

BUTTER AND ITS SUBSTITUTES.

The great majority of the people eat butter and much prefer it to any of the substitutes which have been put on the market, says E. K. Slater, secretary of the National Dairy Union. However, a great many people must use a substitute on account of the high prices which prevail during certain months of the year. Oleomargarine is the most common substitute for butter and millions of pounds of this substance are consumed every year. The difference in cost of production between oleomargarine and butter is so great that when butter is retailed at forty cents a pound oleomargarine may be retailed at twenty cents per pound at as great a profit to the dealer. The person who chooses the substitute should be allowed to do so, and he should be required to pay only the price of the substitute. The difference in price beweenthe genuine product, and the substitute is so great, that dealers are tempted to sell the latter for the former. Only by requiring that the consumers may differentiate between the two articles can honest traffic in the substitute be insured. This was contemplated by Congress when the present internal revenue tax of ten cents per pound was levied upon the "artificially colored oleomargarine." Many people think that all oleomargarine is taxed ten cents a pound. This is not a fact. Oleomargarine which is "artificially colored," so that the consumer cannot distinguish it from butter is the only oleomargarine that is thus taxed. When it is put upon the market in its natural color it is only taxed one-fourth of one cent a pound. It is only when the product is made to look like butter so that it may be fraudulently be sold as butter that a burdensome tax is imposed upon it. The imposition of the tax is not to suppress the sale of oleomargarine or to make it more expensive to the consumer, but to prevent fraud in its sale.

NEW YORK'S MILK SUPPLY.

William Grant Brown, referee in the Milk Trust Inquiry, which has been going on in New York city, says that the health department of the city would greatly aid in lowering the cost of living among

New York's poor, if it would encourage people to buy milk from the can instead of in the bottle. The mere delivery of milk in bottles, he said, costs New York consumers $24,000 a day. According to Mr. Brown, the next move on the part of the board of health will be to require that all ordinary milk be pasteurized, with the further provision that milk may only be sold from stores, devoted entirely to milk and dairy products. The inevitable effect of this action, he says, will be still higher prices for the consumer and greater profit for the dealer. He is quoted as saying further:

"If the health department desired to it could render the sale of milk from cans as sanitary as that of bottled milk, and it would save the people three cents for every quart sold. The people of New York consume two million quarts of milk daily. One-third the cost price $24,000, is paid for delivering the milk to our homes. The balance is sold from open forty quart cans at local stores at six cents a quart. The defects and perils of the open can system are the uncertainty of locating responsibility for adulteration and high temperatures which inevitably result in high bacterial count. Therefore the question comes down to a satisfactory can, properly protected by statute and ordinance. All milk sold other than in bottles should be drawn from a spigot in a can sealed by the party producing or distributing the milk at wholesale, the seal to remain unbroken until the can returns to the producer or distributor, and then to be broken by him, the temperature of the contents never to be permitted to rise above fifty-four degrees Fahrenheit. A hermetically sealed glass measuring faucet, which is returned with the can for sterilizing, completes an absolutely sanitary system."

SALES FORCE STIMULATION.

Speaking in a general way the better you treat your salespeople the more work they will do for you, remarks the Grocers' Review, Of course, you can all think of instances where this hasn't proved true, but the exceptions really prove the rule, and the assertion is approximately correct. Circumstances in this direction never change, always there is a feeling that sales can be increased automatically without any effort on the part of the employer, and sometimes it is well to consider for a moment the influence of some different method on your business. It often seems as though a species of strabismus has seized a majority of the dealers and has rendered them unable to comprehend the possibilities which lie in a somewhat insignificant change so far as the increase of expense or the exertion of extraordinary effort is concerned. Apparently the chief fault with employers is to imagine that the employe is going to plug along day after day until the days lengthen into weeks and the weeks into years, without any indication of appreciation beyond what it presented Saturday nights. But if there are dealers who still adhere to this impression the sooner they get rid of it the more profitable it will be for their business. Such notions might have prevailed a century ago. They are entirely out of place now. To secure the best work you must show your appreciation and your effort to exhibit must be of the most practical character. Every employe in these times is from Missouri, and will insist very forcibly on being shown. regardless of the fact that the employer undoubtedly means well. And this point of showing, of proving to the employe that you mean business and that his efforts are appreciated to the extent that you are willing to renumerate him substantially will really exert more influence on your sales than anything else you could do.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

The Retail Grocers and General Merchants of Michigan held their thirteenth annual convention at Port Huron on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, February 7, 8 and 9. It was an interesting and profitable meeting.

The meat dealers of Ohio are sponsors for a bill now before the legislature permitting the use of harmless coloring matter in oleomargarine, which is now forbidden by the laws of that State. The bill is said to have the approval of the grocers also.

The National Canners' Association held its eighth annual meeting in Milwaukee, Wisconsin from February 5 to February 11, inclusive. The canners are a mighty folk and a law-abiding one. Their convention was highly successful.

A recent decision of the United States District Court in Alabama, required the owners of a shipment of coffee and chickory to relabel their goods before sale. The label describing the goods as coffee and chickory compound was placed on four-pound tin buckets in such a way that it would be destroyed when the bucket was opened. The owner was compelled to pay the court costs and give a bond conditioned upon the relabeling of his goods.

Two bills, both intended to require the sale of dry commodities by weight instead of measure, are before the Ohio legislature. One, introduced by Representative Bertsch, of Columbus, requires the sale of certain specified articles by weight only. The articles enumerated in this bill do not include all the dry commodities sold by grocers and meat dealers, consequently another bill has been introduced which provides, briefly, that all articles of human food, other than liquids, sold in Ohio, shall be sold by averdupois weight or numerical count.

The impression generally prevails, remarks Consul-General John H. Snodgrass, Moscow, that, although nature has most generously favored Russia, little progress is being made in agriculture. This, he says, is erroneous. As an illustration of the interest that is being manifested along these lines, and as indicative of the progressive policy that has been adopted and is now being pursued, it may be cited that the Imperial Agricultural Museum, in its endeavor to popularize the study of agricultural subjects, has for the last few years conducted gratis, at the museum in St. Petersburg, a series of systematic readings on agriculture for the benefit of everyone interested. In addition to this course popular lectures are delivered and special readings conducted for men in the lower ranks of the army.

Here is a remark from the Grocers' Review that may interest some: In our humble opinion the cause of the high cost of living is centred in this fact—the practice of dealers secluding immense quantities of butter and eggs, meat and poultry, together with numerous other articles of food in times of abundance, in order that the prices of these indispensable foods may be kept high and then thrown upon the market at such times when only an abnormally large profit can be secured. Overcome this condition and without the shadow of a doubt lower price figures will rule.

According to the recently published report of South Dakota's dairy expert there are 103 creameries and 700 cream buying stations within the State. In addition 20 creameries located without the State buy cream in South Dakota for shipment to their central plants.

Because they were charged with having used a preparation known as "freeze-em" to preserve meats, two butchers doing business in Tacoma, Washington, were taken into court by the local meat inspector. They said they had merely used the preparation for sterilizing the refrigerator. But medical witnesses testified, however, that the meat contained the article in sufficient quantities to be injurious to health. The butchers were assessed $50 fine each and the costs.

The Indiana State Dairy Association held its twenty-first annual meeting in the farm engineering building or Perdue University on January 12 and 13. The meeting was held at a time when 1,400 farmers of the State were attending the farmers' short course at the university. The result was a large attendance and a successful meeting.

Because a State Food agent at Houlton, Kansas, condemned 120 gallons of oysters, valued at $280, as unfit for food, the fishes in the river got the entire output.

Because he sold pickles put up in a carton that did not show that the said pickles were preserved with alum, a Malden, Mass., grocery firm was fined $25. The firm's negligence violated one of the State's pure food laws.

Dr. Cutler, the Food Commissioner of Missouri, is asking the legislature of the state to give him an additional number of deputies in order to enable him to adequately accomplish all he desires to do along the lines of improving food producing conditions in that state and the handling of food products.

If the legislatures of Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska and Oklahoma are willing to follow the advice of the Dairy and Food Commissioners of the aforesaid States, they will adopt uniform legislation providing that all eggs offered for sale shall be labeled and candled before they are handed over to the consumers.

Rumor says that nine tons of bad eggs, sorted and shipped to New York by Chicago cold storage concerns never reached the hands of the bakers and other more or less honest folk who were supposed to be awaiting them. They seem to have fallen into the hands of pure food agents.

A Minnesota dairy and food officer visited St. Paul in the discharge of his duties and confiscated over two hundred pounds of "kippered salmon" on the ground that they had been colored with coal tar dye, contrary to the law of the state.

When food makes you dangerously ill the inference that it lacks wholsomeness is quite natural, especially if the illness take the form of ptomaine poisoning.

The authorities of Washington—we mean those especially charged with the enforcement of sanitary laws—are getting very particular. It is said a grocer was fined not long ago for permitting dust to accumulate on his windows and for having a dirty floor and cellar full of debris. Ten dollars and the costs, the magistrate told him, on condition that he would go home straightway and clean up, never permitting it to happen again. Fifty years ago and less the condition of a man's premises was his own affair.

The State Dairy and Food Department of Minnesota does not permit grocers who sell adulterated maple sugar, in violation of the State law, to plead ignorance of the adulteration of the goods or that the person from whom they purchased it represented it as absolutely pure. Twenty-five dollars each and costs was the sentence imposed upon two luckless offenders.

American fruits, fresh, dried, etc., are featured in the displays of the large groceries and produce dealers in Tsingtau, China. Good prices are obtained. The tinned fruits are to be found on the shelves of every grocery dealer, large or small.

A corespondent of Hoard's Dairyman writing from Mississippi, declares that the southern dairyman has great advantages over his northern neighbor, as the longer growing season, low priced land and higher prices for his products are great advantages. He adds that the same quality of cows produce far more than they would in the northern states. Oh, well, we can't have all the advantages of life in our bracing climate.

The tenth annual meeting of the Wisconsin Buttermakers' Association was held at La Crosse, January 31 to February 3. It was well attended and a keen interest was felt in the program.

Hoard's Dairyman favors the multiplication of county agricultural schools. It says: The county agricultural school is right at home, right among us. It is like building a fire to warm and encourage the boys who cannot be warmed and encouraged by that far-off fire, the agricultural college, no matter how brightly it blazes.

Professor King puts matters graphically before the general public when he rises to remark: "We can live five weeks without food, five days without water, but only about five minutes without air." And then Hoard's Dairyman applies it forcibly to farmers and dairymen by declaring that there is a fearful amount of ignorance among farmers on the importance of the ventilation of cow stables. "Not only have we bred tuberculosis and other diseases by weakening the bodies of our cattle, but we have as well reduced the amount of milk they would produce. Thus we have been punished in both ways for our ignorance."

Here is what a New York city retail grocer says, as quoted by the American Grocer: "The greatest business perfection reached, consists of the production, gathering together and distribution to the greatest number economically, of the best foods necessary to human life."

The American Grocer declares that too many lose the race because they put the gathering of the almighty dollar ahead of service, instead of making service the first consideration. They forget that it is notable or satisfactory service that brings in the shekels.

GREAT VARIETY OF CANNED GOODS.

The use of canned goods has grown tremendously in the last ten years, says the Christian Science Monitor, Boston, Mass. Canned goods have come to mean things put up at the factory, not the luscious fruits that are brought into the kitchen in crates and baskets on a bright summer morning, and in the evening are stowed away in jars and glasses on the shelves of the cold storage room in the cellar. The putting up of fruits and vegetables is now done at great centres and they finally reach the family table via the telephone. This is a great saving of labor, a tremendous convenience, and the cost is frequently less than it would be if the things were put up in one's own kitchen. Particularly is this true of vegetables. Vegetables, indeed, were never put up to any extent by the housewife, as they are difficult to do and hard to keep, and with squash, turnips, onions, carrots and some other things that keep way into the winter, a few jars of tomatoes, a few of corn and a few more of beans were quite enough to see one through until spring. Then there began to be tinned tomatoes, corn and beans and from that grew the great establishments which send out a product equal to any the home could show.

The largest of these have separate factories dotted over the country where abounds a particular fruit or vegetable. Some have them all over the world. The peach, or the tomato, or whatever it may be, is gathered when at its best and taken at once to the factory and immediately preserved or canned without going through the delay of shipment, transfer from the wholesale to the retail dealer, and at length to the home kitchen, often a period of several days elapsing from the time it was taken from the parent stem to that when it receives the touch of the home cook. To the tomatoes, corn, beans and peas have been added nearly all the vegetables that grow, including asparagus and even canned pumpkin and canned squash, all ready for the addition of spices, milk and eggs for the great American pie.

Most of the factories now court visitors. They make cleanliness an advertising feature. The pure food laws make it obligatory to state on each jar, bottle or can the ingredients used, so there is little likelihood of getting anything undesirable. Some large retail houses have certain things put up especialy for them. These are selected goods, the vegetable or fruit being of a particular kind and grade, and are supposed to be better than those put up in immense quantities.

Except with tomatoes and peas at the height of the season the canned vegetables are cheaper than the fresh. In fruits those bought at the store of the same grades as those put up at home are usually more expensive. Many people prefer the flavor of their own home-prepared products better than the finest brands put up on the market, particularly with catsups, pickles and some kinds of fruits. Then again, the factory made are not infrequently preferred to the best home-made. Everything in the pickle line is much cheaper to buy in bulk than in bottles. The same grade put up in jars costs again as much as that sold by measure.

In addition to fruits, etc., there are other prepared foods and the list is constantly growing. Soups of all kinds can now be bought in cans, affording a variety quite beyond the ability of the average cook. There are canned baked beans, canned spaghetti, canned corn beef hash, canned meats and fish of various kinds and canned milk and cream, potatoes put up in packages and Saratoga chips.

Although it is now possible to get fresh fruits and vegetables the whole year around, take canned goods out of the market and there is not a table that would not suffer in consequence, nor a household that would not be seriously affected by the inconvenience. They are certainly excellent, they are not expensive, they are labor and time savers, and in a thousand and one ways they are a boon to the housewife. It is always wise to have them on hand, for they are ready for an emergency, and with their aid a good meal can be prepared quickly. For the small housekeeper, those who are doing light housekeeping in small flats—and every year their number grows larger—for the summer cottager and the camper, canned goods are a necessity.

CONCERNING NECESSARY PRECAUTIONS.

The following letter by Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust to the Editor of the Grocery World and General Merchant is self-explanatory. It is commended to the diligent attention of all grocers and others who are interested in the display or sale of foodstuffs:

Elton J. Buckley, Esq.,

Editor, The Grocery World and General Merchant,

Philadelphia, Pa.

Dear Sir: In reply to your letter of March 11, inquiring concerning the interpretation placed by this Bureau upon clause 6 of Section 3, and paragraph 4 of Section 5 of the General Food Act of May 13, 1909:

The clause and paragraph referred to are as follows:

"Sixth. If it consists of, or is manufactured in whole or in part from, a diseased, contaminated, filthy, or decomposed substance, either animal or vegetable; or an animal or vegetable substance produced, stored, transported, or kept in a way or manner that would render the article diseased, contaminated, or unwholesome; or if it is any part of the product of a diseased animal, or the product of an animal that has died otherwise than by slaughter."

"But if said person shall violate the provisions of paragraph six, section three of this act, by having stored or transported or kept said article, in said paragraph mentioned, in a way or manner to render it diseased, contaminated, or unwholesome, said person shall be proceeded against for a violation of the provisions of this act; and it shall not be necessary for conviction that any article, sample, or portion thereof, shall be obtained by the Dairy and Food Commissioner, or his agent, as a condition precedent to prosecution."

Without attempting a complete statement of the executive interpretation of the foregoing portions of the law, the attention of food dealers should be called, with especial emphasis, to the fact that the law requires them to take all the precautions necessary for keeping clean and sound, as well as unadulterated and properly labeled, the foods they sell, and that, during the warmer seasons of the year, when flies and other insects are especially numerous and active, and the dust of the streets is most abundant, particular care is necessary to comply with the law.

The attention, not only of grocery men, but also of all who sell foods and non-alcoholic drinks, fruits, vegetables, meats, and the general marketer, should be called to the legal requirements above mentioned and all such food vendors should take, during the months of June, July, August and September, particular care to keep screened from the access of flies and other insects, foods whose exterior portions are customarily consumed, or brought into contact with the mouth of the consumer.

It is likewise important that such food materials shall be so kept as not to be exposed to contact with the dust of the streets, for flies and other insects not only contaminate the food directly, as also does street dust, and render it undesirable from the aesthetic point of view, but also scientific investigation has amply proven that flies are extremely dangerous conveyors of disease germs, and that the dust of the streets in all thickly settled places carries millions of living organisms, including many of the most dangerous disease germs, so that food to which flies and street dust have had access becomes unavoidably both contaminated and unwholesome.

Grocers who desire to display, on the sidewalk before their stores, such commodities as vegetables and fruits, should keep them upon stands sufficiently elevated above the level of the walk to make impossible their contamination by passing animals, and in the case of apples, pears and similar fruits, which are sometimes eaten, especially by children, without previous removal of the fruit skin, should see that such food products are carefully protected from flies and dust by suitable covers.

Very truly yours,

JAMES FOUST,
Dairy and Food Commissioner.

CONTENTS OF THE NEW SAUSAGE ACT.

An important addition to the pure food legislation of this Commonwealth was made when Governor Tener affixed his signature to the act providing for the protection of the public health and the prevention of fraud and deception by prohibiting the sale of adulterated or deleterious sausage. The act also defines sausage and prescribes the penalty for the violation of its several provisions.

Section 1 provides that it shall be unlawful for any person or persons, either personally or acting through another, to sell, offer for sale, expose to sale, or have in possession with intent to sell, sausage that is adulterated within the meaning of the act.

Section 2, which defines sausage, declares that for the purpose of the act sausage meat shall be held to be a comminuted meat from neat cattle or swine, or a mixture of such meats, either fresh, salt, pickled or smoked, with added salt and spices, and with or without the addition of edible fats, blood and sugar, or subsequent smoking. It shall contain no larger amount of water than the meats from which it is prepared contain when in their fresh condition.

Section 3 declares that for the purpose of this act sausage shall be deemed to be adulterated:

First. If it contains added water in excess of the quantity required to bring the amount up to that which the meats from which it it prepared contain immediately after slaughter.

Second. If it contains any cereal or vegetable flour.

Third. If it contains any coal tar dye, boric acid or borates, sulphites, sulphur dioxide, sulphurous acid, or any other substance injurous or deleterious to health.

Fourth. If it contains any diseased, contaminated, filthy, or decomposed substance, or is manufactured in whole or in part from a diseased, contaminated, filthy, or decomposed substance, or a substance produced, stored, transported, or kept in any way or manner that would render the article diseased, contaminated or unwholesome, or if it is any product of a diseased animal, or the product of any animal that has died otherwise than by slaughter.

Section 4 provides that any person who shall violate the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be sentenced to pay a fine of not less than $100, nor more than $200, or to undergo an imprisonment of not less than thirty days, nor more than sixty days, or both, or either, at the discretion of the court.

Section 5 authorizes and commands the Dairy and Food Commissioner to enforce the provisions of the act, while Section 6 provides that all fines and penalties imposed and recovered for the violation of any of the provisions of the act shall be paid to the Dairy and Food Commissioner or his agent, and when so collected and paid shall thereafter be, by the Dairy and Food Commissioner, paid into the State Treasury for the use of the Commonwealth.

THE FOOD BUREAU AND THE SAUSAGE ACT.

In an interview, Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust alludes to the sausage bill, known as "Senate Bill No. 46," recently approved by Governor Tener.

He says that this bill was intended to divorce the meat shop from the grist mill and the drug store, and to favor the use of coal tar dyes for beautifying the costumes of the fair sex, rather than for giving abnormal colors to the human interior.

The sausage act specifically forbids the use, in the manufacture of sausage, of cereal and vegetable flours, and also the added water which such flours will enable the sausage to hold and keep until the frying pan is reached. Many a housewife will recall that the article she took to be a sausage, when tested by the pricking fork applied to the sausage in the heated pan, spurted water freely to the ceiling, and in general, acted like a broken fire hose.

The Commissioner also notes that the new act is intended to restrain those sausage dealers who have been in the habit, in past years, of cooking their bologna in coal tar dye, for the purpose of making it appear better than their competitors were able to do by the use of good, wholesome, natural meats; and also those whose instincts of economy have led them to use inferior products, too long kept, and to employ sulphites and other powerful drugs to aid them in palming off upon the people these unfit materials.

The law defines sausage, and excludes from its manufacture all materials that are not clean and sound and suitable for human consumption.

The Commissioner notes that this bill was drafted and passed as the result of the demand by the honest and reputable sausage makers of the state, large delegations of whom, from Pittsburg, Philadelphia and Scranton, appeared before the Legislative Committee and urged the passage of the act.

The Commissioner approves of this measure, and earnestly hopes that the manufacture and sale of adulterated sausage, whether made within or without the State, will be promptly suppressed.

The commissioner trusts that all who make sausage for sale in Pennsylvania, or market sausage made in other states, shall give due heed to the requirements of this law, and gives notice that its provisions will be vigorously enforced, and to the end that the public may have full information, hopes that this interview may be widely published by the papers of the Commonwealth.

DIGESTIBILITY OF CHEESE.

C. F. Doans, of the Bureau of Animal Industry of the United States Department of Agriculture, after an exhaustive study of the digestibility of American or Cheddar cheese, has made a lengthy report on the subject and he finds that as a food product the common American or Cheddar cheese stands first in the quantity made and consumed. Swiss cheese is perhaps second, while on the basis of economy, the different kinds of cheese made from skim milk, princapally cottage cheese, are of great importance. From the standpoint of condimental value two other cheeses are of special importance. These are Camembert and Roquefort, two highly flavored kinds. But, says the American Grocer, they are comparatively expensive and are of such a nature that few people would care to eat more than a small quantity at a time. In general, the table shows that all kinds of cheese, even the very highly flavored and condimental cheeses, have a high food value. But the so-called condimental value of cheese when eaten in small quantities as a stimulus to digestion of other foods was not demonstrated by the experiments conducted.

The Swiss, who are a very healthy people, eat very largely of cheese; in fact, bread and cheese form the greater part of the diet of many of them. Many other European races eat very largely of cheese. The miners of England eat very largely of the poor cheese made in the United States, especially the high acid cheese, using it extensively for seasoning; and the Germans use large quantities of the cheap but highly flavored skim milk cheese such as the hand kase, which has perhaps the most pungent odor of all varieties of cheese made.

Heretofore cheese has seldom been regarded seriously by consumers of any class in the United States as a possible cheap staple food. All consumers of cheese with very few exceptions use it as a luxury in small quantities at comparatively rare intervals. While in the aggregate large quantities of cheese are eaten in the United States, the quantity is nevertheless almost neglible when compared with some other products of less food value and inferior palatability.

The greater part of the cheese consumed in this country is eaten without any preparation, while in many European countries the cheese is either sprinkled on other foods—vegetables usually—or is cooked with the food. Americans have evidently much to learn from Europeans in some of the possibilities of preparing such dishes. A number of European varieties of cheese are made extensively and exclusively for use in connection with other foods or for cooking. Among these is the well known parmesan, a hard cheese made from skim milk; and also the sap sago cheese, a small conical shaped cheese made from skim milk and highly seasoned with herbs. The Italians use cheese for flavoring as the Americans use salt and pepper, having it grated and constantly on hand in a small shaker. With them macaroni with cheese is a common dish, as are other cheese preparations. An excellent dish is the cheeese omelet, while warmed up potatoes can be made very appetizing when cooked with cheese. In view of the foregoing comparison of the food values it is a matter of some wonder why there is not more of a demand for cheese, especially by the people of limited means. Estimates made by the Department of Agriculture in the Twenty-second and Twenty-sixth annual reports of this bureau and in Bulletin 55 of the Bureau of Statistics, show that the people of the United States consume between 169 and 185 pounds of butter annually per capita, besides fish and poultry, while the annual consumption of cheese is only about four pounds per capita.

THE NEW MILK BILL.

In an interview, Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust, commented upon the new milk law, known as House Bill No. 646, which was approved by Governor Tener on the 8th day of June, A. D. 1911. This law, said the Commissioner, marks a great step forward in the interest of the householder and the honest dairyman. It puts the pump out of commission as a substitute for the good old brindle cow, and gives the town child a chance to get fair food. It drives the drug-shop out of the milk depot, and halts the deceptive thickener as it enters the door.

The law, the Commissioner adds, fixes the standard for milk-fat at 3.25 per cent. and that for total milk solids at 12 per cent., these being the percentages below which milk sold for household use and to be served in hotels, restaurants and boarding houses may not go. This is the first law enacted in Pennsylvania in which a milk standard for the entire State has been fixed. It is worthy of note also, said the Commissioner, that the standard thus set is identical with the national milk standard governing the milk trade between the States. This standard was proclaimed by the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, under authority of Congress, upon the recommendation of an expert commission who had studied the milk laws of the various cities and commonwealths of the Union, as well as the composition of milk of known purity from thousands of dairy cows of all breeds and from all parts of the country.

The law interferes, however, with no fair trade in any wholesome milk or milk product. Skim milk, when clean and wholesome, may still be sold, if sold as such, for household use, and milk yielded by cows of low fat strains may easily be brought to standard by the use in the herd of cows producing fat-rich milk, or may be sold to the creamery as heretofore on the basis of its actual analysis.

The Commissioner further states that this law also improves the standard for cream, bringing up the requirement to 18 per cent., as in the national standard, and prohibits the sale as "cream" of a mixture of cream with evaporated or condensed milk, or with any other substance having the effect of increasing its thickness or consistency. The analyses of the creams recently on sale in the State show clearly the fairness of this standard.

The Commissioner expresses the hope that the press may give the fullest publicity to these facts so that the milk dealers may all be informed of these changes in the law and may guard against any transgression of the requirements.

ICE CREAM AS A HEALTH FOOD.

The state experiment station at Ames, Iowa, has invented a new frozen dairy product called lacto, which contains large numbers of lactic acid bacteria in a dormant condition, says the Scientific American. Metchnikoff, the famous Russian scientist, who is at the head of the Pasteur Institute in Paris, says that in a considerable measure old age is caused by the putrefactive bacteria in the intestines. These bacteria cause toxic poisons which cause ill health, old age and finally death. He recommends as a remedy the taking into the body of lactic acid bacteria. These are entirely harmless and they produce an acid condition in the intestines which is fatal to the putrefaction microbes.

In certain districts of Bulgaria, where sour milk forms the principal article of diet, the people live to an old age not approached elsewhere. People in America do not take kindly to sour milk, and it was with the thought of furnishing lactic acid bacteria in a more palatable form that lacto was introduced.

The palatability of lacto is shown by an experiment carried out at Ames. Out of 179 persons who sampled lacto, 128 pronounced it very good, 37 good, 6 fair, and 8 poor. Comparing it with vanilla ice cream, 111 reported that they preferred lacto, 9 considered it equal to ice cream, and 59 preferred the ice cream. Comparing lacto to sherbet 123 preferred lacto, 30 preferred sherbet, and 6 considered lacto equal to ice cream. At the college creamery both lacto and ice cream were made and sold at the same price last summer. An average of eight days' sales showed that 46.8 per cent. of the sales were of lacto. This is a very considerable showing for a new product.

Lacto is made of loppered whole or skim milk, with the addition of eggs, lemons and flavoring material. It contains less fat than ice cream, but more protein. It has a much higher food value than sherbets and ices. It is more digestible than ice cream, and can be eaten in almost any quantity without ill results. Freezing does not hurt the lactic acid germs, and they retain their vitality even after the product has been stored for some time in a frozen condition. Bacteriological analyses of lacto show that it does not contain any other form of bacteria than the lactic acid produces. This is notwithstanding the fact that no especial pains were taken to keep other bacteria out of the product, and goes to prove that lactic acid is fatal to putrefactive bacteria.

HOME-MADE AND READY-MADE BREAD AND PASTRY.

One reason given by the Grocery World and General Merchant for the high cost of living is the decrease in the average housewife's inclination to do her own baking. Instead of buying a bag of flour and making her own bread, cakes and pies as she used to do she buys the ready-made articles, at several times the cost. Some of the trade for the ready-made pastry and bread goes to the grocer, but the bulk of it probably goes to the baker. In support of its claim that ready-made food costs more than the home-made article that paper presents the statement of a housewife who made a list of exactly what she got out of a 12 pound bag of flour and compared it with what the same articles would have cost her had she bought them ready-made. Her statement follows:,

"I am always interested in relative values, and two years ago without any thought of making the result public, I jotted down from day to day the various purposes for which I used a sack of flour containing 12¼ pounds, and for which I paid 40 cents. I copy verbatim from my notebook:

One dozen biscuits made with baking powder, one cake (2 cupfuls of flour), two loaves of bread, 10 rolls, two loaves of bread, 10 rolls, one cupful of flour for corn bread, two loaves of bread, 10 rolls, one small batch of cookies. Each two loaves were equal to three loaves of baker's bread, and if we consider the relative nourishment, probably worth more, but to be fully within reason I will call it three. The ten rolls were made from a portion of the dough from which the loaves were made, and were equal to a dozen baker's rolls. Therefore the value of one batch of bread and rolls was two loaves of bread, 15 cents, ten rolls, 10 cents; total 25 cents. This amount of bread and rolls were made three times—total value 75 cents if bought ready-made from the grocer. Had I used all the flour for the bread and rolls I should have had 35 cents remaining. The yeast cost 6 cents as I made bread three times, using each time a whole yeast cake. Allowing 6 cents for yeast and as much for lard and one cent for salt and sugar the whole cost of the three bakings outside the flour would be 13 cents. Deduct 13 cents from 35 cents and you have a gain of 22 cents, plus the flour used for one cake, 2½ dozen biscuits, 1 batch of cookies, two cupfuls for corn bread and one for dredger. I do not estimate the fuel because I bake my bread with either the dinner or the supper fire. Notice that the bread and the rolls were made entirely of flour. I now decrease the amount of flour by using a small quantity of sweet or white potatoes.

SUPPOSITION NOT VALID.

A recent decision has been made at Washington in favor of the internal revenue department, remarks the Creamery Journal. A certain creamery was said to have made butter exceeding in water content the limit allowed by law. The creamery put up the defense that it was using a moisture test, supposedly a thoroughly reliable test, and in any event the only sort of moisture test sold by the supply house with which this creamery did business. But the result of this test did not seem to correspond with the result of the government's tests, and the court held that while the creamery probably used reasonable diligence the records showed that it had violated the law. In his decision the judge said: "It may be that in common use the test the creamery used is relied on, but the law exacts a higher standard than that. The statute does not say if you use reasonable care, or if you purchase a tester that is commonly used in the market, that you have satisfied the requirements of the law; and, inasmuch as you have assumed the burden of proving that you did not engage in the manufacture of adulterated butter, I think the proof fails to prove the negative. In other words that you have not introduced evidence which shows as a matter of fact that you were not producing what would be adulterated butter under this statute all of the time, or that every pound of the product of your creamery was not adulterated butter."

ADULTERATED GINGER ALE.

Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust has just ordered six prosecutions in Pittsburg for the sale of ginger ale containing capsicum without due notice to the consumer. The capsicum or red pepper is added to ginger ale for the purpose of increasing their pungency or property of causing a burning sensation in throat and stomach, a very little red pepper producing the pungent effect of much ginger, but in no other respect serving the flavoring functions of this spice. Some makers of bottled drinks make two grades of ginger ale, a pure variety, for domestic consumption, and another to which red pepper has been added, for the cheaper trade. It is not denied that red pepper may have some advantages for the use of a person with a diseased or atonic stomach, but the Dairy and Food Commissioner holds that red pepper is not a normal constituent of ginger ale and insists, since this beverage is always sold in labelled bottles, that when red pepper has been added the fact shall be plainly stated upon the label, so that the consumer may have due notice of the abnormal quality of this modified product.

MILK HELPS IN OLD AGE.

Cazalis said: "A man is as old as his arteries." This of course is far from being a definition of old age, says the Milk Reporter. But when a man reaches middle life he should abstain from the strenuous exercises of his earlier years. Work moderately, but steadily. Slow down in the matter of diet, and do not let the pleasures of the table tempt you to gradually increased indulgence in rich food as the more active pleasures of life are relinquished. Golf, billiards, hill climbing, hunting and fishing are all beneficial forms of exercise which may all be indulged far into old age. It is true that long life is often a matter of the quality of one's "tubing." The diseases that are responsible for the larger part of the death rate after middle life are of the degenerative class, involving the heart, blood-vessels and kidneys. Indeed, where one of the conditions exists the others usually are present to a greater or less degree. These conditions may be due to nerve strain affecting the heart and arteries or to the circulation in the blood of poisonous principles, the products of indigestion and insufficient combustion. In fact, these troubles are usually the result of intemperance in eating, drinking, working or playing.

The danger of constipation is always with an old or middle aged person. Metchnikoff believes that the absorption of toxic matter from the large intestines is an important influence in causing old age, he suggests the use of sour milk or a preparation of the bacilli which cause milk to become sour to combat the microbes that infest the large intestines.

Scores of authorities recommend buttermilk and other sour milk preparations as most healthful, especially where there is constipation or intestinal fermentation. Skim milk is also of great value as a food product. All natural means should be tried to prevent constipation by avoidance of concentrated meat diet and by the use of fruit, spinnach or other green vegetables, water and skim milk or buttermilk betwen meals, and the exercise of the abdominal muscles.

RAISE PRESERVING BACTERIA.

Innoculated butter—guaranteed to keep fresh for months—into which millions of beneficial bacteria have been introduced for the purpose of preserving it, will be in common use in the near future, and the part hitherto played by boric acid in butter will henceforth be played by the active microbe, according to the Chicago Inter-Ocean.

The production of these preservative micro-organisms is the object of a new company, which is installing large laboratories where millions and millions of bacteria for use in the dairies will be raised.

The manager of the new company said that the discovery of the preservative microbe was the result of scientific research. "Its object," he said, "is to fight other microbes that are found in butter which have a harmful effect upon it—that of turning it rancid. The only way of combating these germs hitherto has been by the use of preservative chemicals which are harmful adulterants. But now my firm has succeeded in finding an antidote germ to the harmful one, and by introducing it into the milk before churning, butter is made which will keep fresh and pure for a long time. The innoculation of the milk has set up a fight between the opposing armies of germs, and the bad ones which would destroy the freshness of the butter, are destroyed by the harmless ones that are introduced."

The microbes are sold in the form of a clear liquid in small bottles, which is added to buttermilk and prepared in a certain way before use. When the preparation is ready one gallon of it is added to every twenty gallons of cream in the butter churn, the rest of the butter-making process proceeding in the usual way.

ABUSES OF COLD STORAGE.

Human ingenuity is almost infinite in its scope and activity, and now this beneficient instrument, which is capable of the best uses, is being turned by evil genius into an agency of oppression and wrong, says the Philadelphia Public Ledger. We shall not pretend to guess how many million pounds or tons of meat, poultry, fish, butter, game, fruits, or how many myriad dozen eggs, or what prodigious quantities and varieties of edibles have been bought and stored with the definite purpose of preventing the people from having reasonable cheap and fresh food. The laws of supply and demand seem to have been wholly subverted so that an inordinate profit might be heaped up for the "forestallers and regraters," the monopolists and scurvy manipulators. What is the age of this stuff, how long may this food be kept without impairing its nourishing qualities, how long may it be stored without becoming a positive detriment and menace?

What is the inevitable complement to this process of playing fast and loose with the food of the population? It is regrettable to be forced to admit, but with cold storage there must be inspection and regulation. Why should Dr. Wiley and his bureau at Washington be so disturbed as to the exact purity of the little Scotch whiskey imported and consumed by the people if the bulk of the very food of the families of the land may be hoarded indefinitely, or even kept from the channels of trade forever, or finally "dumped in its embalmed state, long after it is unfit to eat, and sold to the hapless people ignorant of its quality or deadliness? Cold storage is all right, but it should be regulated and its abuse prevented.

RABBIT SAUSAGE.

Down in Georgia there is gastronomic joy over the discovery of a new table delicacy in the form of rabbit sausage, says the Louisville Courier-Journal. The benefactor to mankind who made the discovery lives in Wilkes county, and there is more rejoicing in Wilkes over one Molly Hare made into mincemeat than over ninety and nine specimens of the same that have been fried, stewed, boiled or barbecued.

The good news is gradually percolating into other parishes. The inventor of the rabbit sausage is showing no disposition to bottle up his rare recipe, to peddle patent rights or to put in a claim for royalties. It was in Georgia that President Taft made his first acquaintance with "possum," and now all the Georgians are saying that the proud, marsupial, nocturnal "bird" is not deserving of mention in the same breath with rabbit sausage. The President will have a new epicurean experience coming to him next time he sets foot on Georgia soil.

Rabbit sausage looks good at long range. Those who like rabbit in the various forms in which it is wont to be served in Kentucky would need little persuasion to join in an assault upon Wilkes county's latest production in the line of high class "eats." Those who are fortunate enough to recall the famous country sausage that once was to be had in nearly every country farm house in its proper season will be hard to convince that anything better ever was or ever will be discovered. If rabbit sausage is anywhere near half as good it may be assured of its calling and election.

PURE FOOD LABELS 3000 YEARS OLD.

The first pure food labels in history and the first instance on record of keeping wines in a government warehouse under seal have come to light with the discovery of Prof. George A. Reisner, of Harvard, of the earliest specimens of Hebrew writings in the excavations of the ancient city of Samaria, in Palestine. Dating back to the period of King Ahab, fully 900 B. C., these inscriptions are to be considered one of the greatest finds of the Harvard Palestine expedition.

The importance of these new inscriptions to the archaeologists is such that they promise to bring about a revision of scientific opinion as to the form of early Hebrew writings, and will set at rest doubts that have been raised for a score of years as to how early the scribes used the Phoenician letters from which the alphabet was derived.

Prof. David G. Lyon, head of the Harvard Semetic museum, pronounces these inscriptions to be the earliest specimens of Hebrew writings known and "the first Palestine records of this nature to be found."

These inscriptions which were excavated are labels which were employed as seals on wine and oil jars. They mention the years in which the wine was laid down in the cellars of the palace storehouse and they state the vineyard from which the wine came. On the oil jars the labels run, "A Jar of Pure Oil," with the mention of the district from which the oil came.

These labels, about seventy-five in number, have been dug up on the ruins of the storehouse attached to the palace of King Ahab some 3,000 years ago, and the names of the owners as given indicate that not only the king himself, but other men stored their wines and oils there.

Prof. Lyon says: "The script in which they are written is the Phoenician which was widely current in antiquity. It is very different from the so-called square characters in which the existing Hebrew manuscripts of the Bible are written, dating far ahead of that time. The inscriptions are written in ink with a reed pen in an easy flowing hand and show a pleasing contrast to the stiff form of Phoenician inscriptions cut in stone.

CONSUMER AND MANUFACTURER.

Not because of canned goods, but because of other package foods, says The Trade, we believe the country will demand the weight and measure addition to the pure food law; and they are basing their claims on the right to know what and how much of an article one is buying. If there is justice in this, and it cannot be denied, there is equal justice in the requirement that the consumer should know who made the goods. That the maker of the good should be made to father them; and that goods of unknown or of uncertain origin should be excluded from the market are considerations in connection with this question every way as just as the first proposition. The one should not be allowed to pass into law without carrying the other with it. The claim that the jobber fathers the goods is not sound; for he is but the foster father, at the best and the origin of the goods is left in doubt, in uncertainty.

IMPROVING THE QUALITY OF EGGS.

An active campaign for the improvement of farm eggs in the middle west was undertaken last summer by the Bureau of Animal Industry of the United States Department of Agriculture, remarks the American Grocer. The work was preceded by a general survey of the field in the spring of 1908, which showed that an enormous loss was being sustained annually as a result of spoiled and deteriorated eggs. This loss results from the ignorance, carelessness, or indifference of the farmer and from the dilatory and unsatisfactory method of marketing in vogue. The actual money loss is suffered mainly by the farmer, while the loss in quality is borne by the consumer. A report of this preliminary investigation was published as circular 140 of the Bureau of Animal Industry.

The campaign of the past summer had for its ultimate end the improvement of conditions surrounding the handling and marketing of eggs, and consequently the improvement of the quality of the egg itself as it reaches the consumer. Coincident with such improvement there will be a saving to the farmer of a great part of the money loss at present sustained, The results thus far have been so satisfactory that it is proposed to continue the work in Kansas, where is was started in, during the coming summer.

SUGGESTIVE STOREKEEPING.

A retail grocer who is at all inventive and ingenious can find in what is going on about him a perfect mint of ideas for making his store something more than an uninteresting place for buying the necessaries of life, says the Grocery World and General Merchant. He can make it the centre of both information and suggestion. For instance, there is in every community a considerable number of people who refuse to eat pork because they believe it unclean, impure and unwholesome. This belief, as to all pork, is wholly without foundation, yet costs every retail dealer much trade. The United States Department of Agriculture has issued a pamphlet on pork as food, in which the statement is made and repeatedly reiterated that if the meat is properly cooked it is as good as any other. This is just one sample paragraph taken from the pamphlet:

"A temperature of about 160 degrees Fahrenheit kills the parasite of trichinosis, therefore pork when properly cooked can be eaten without any danger of infection. Fresh pork should be cooked until it becomes white and is no longer red in color in all portions of the piece, at the centre as well as near the surface. Dry salt pork, pickled pork and smoked pork previously salted or pickled, providing the curing is thorough are practically safe so far as trichinosis is concerned.

Suppose a grocer should send for this pamphlet and clip out portions which assure consumers that they can eat pork with impunity; suppose he arranged these on a large card and placed them in his window a conspicuous sign: To You Who Think You Can't Eat Pork," and suppose as a result that he only persuaded one person to eat pork who had not eaten it before would the experiment have paid for the postage and trouble?"

BUTTER AND ITS MANUFACTURE.

Speaking of the development of the butter manufacturing industry The Creamery Journal says that it has been truly wonderful and that present conditions would indicate that the next twenty-five years will produce many changes. The manufacturing end is developed far in advance of the production methods, and it is reasonable to predict a revision along this latter line, and a radical one, too. The present condition of the market is the first direct result of the reckless, unreasonable and unwarranted depths which many butter manufacturerers have adopted in order to secure butter-fat. "Cream, cream, good cream if you can get it, but get cream," seems to have been the slogan the past few years, and as a result today we have a badly crippled industry. The markets are not to blame, the consumer is not to blame nor even is the farmer. The trouble originated among the manufacturers and the remedy must there also begin its work. The consuming public stands ready to buy good butter at reasonable prices and under those conditions they will accept no substitutes. That is at least one encouraging feature, and it is up to the manufacturers to restore peace.

The butter factories of the future are going to be distributed throughout the producing territories close to the sources of supply. In other words the local creameries are "coming back." The creameries of the future are going to buy milk and cream according to a quality basis; they are going to send out their own wagons to gather the raw material as often as necessary to insure the best quality and not allow the patron to deliver his own product unless in a clean sweet condition. The buttermaker is going to have more authority in regard to the acceptance of raw material as well as more absolute control of the other factors affecting quality. How soon these conditions will be brought about no one is prepared to say, but they must come or buttermaking will be cast aside as an unprofitable industry. If our butter could be made under the conditions mentioned quality would resume the high standard of 20 years ago and we would need very few laws to prevent oleomargarine being sold as butter. In spite of the slipshod methods of handling the raw material from farms to factories dairy sentiment is growing in volume each year, and our manufacturers are responsible, we believe, for the training of these new recruits in a manner that will instill the prime importance of quality into their views. We have reached a crisis and the future of the industry is dependent upon our reformatory methods adopted within the next few years.

TUBERCULOSIS AND MILK PRICES.

On account of the great amount of protein they contain, milk and eggs are being used as the weapons to fight against tuberculosis, and from statistics obtained in cases where they were employed, the dairy products are waging a winning battle, says the Cincinnati Times-Star. As there are too many thousands of people in the United States suffering from one form of lung trouble or another, it is but pertinent to inquire what effect this new order of things will have on the milk supply of the future. According to the census of 1900 about one-third of the milk produced for sale by farmers of the United States was consumed directly as milk and cream, while the remainder was made into butter and cheese. The figures show that, on the average, each person in this country consumed about 20 gallons of milk a year, or that each family of five used a quart a day. Milk and cream together furnish 12 per cent. of the total food of the average American family. The price of butter today the highest it has been for years is due to the fact that the people are drinking more milk, making milk scarcer for the making of butter and cheese. The demand for milk has become so great that there is very little left for making butter and cheese. Ten years ago milk could be bought for five cents a quart, while now it sells at eight and ten cents a quart. The care and management of the dairy cow, the effect of different systems of feeding on the yield and quality of milk, the distribution and marketing of milk is greatly improved, all helping to contribute to the advance in prices. On account of the great demand for milk the next statistics taken of dairy products are expected to show some interesting figures.

EGGS MUST BE LABELED IN INDIANA.

Eggs that have lingered long in storage houses and possibly have "ripened" since they left the farm months before, henceforth must be labeled in Indiana, says the Greenville Tribune of Indiana. In the new cold storage law passed by the legislature of Indiana is a provision stating that every dealer must place on the receptacle containing eggs, which have been stored more than thirty days, a card not less than six inches square bearing the words "cold storage" in Gothic letters two inches square. The paper packages in which the eggs are delivered must also be marked. In the cold storage bill Commissioner Barnard believes the best law of the kind in the country will be in force after being signed by the governor and put into force when the other acts of assembly are promulgated. It provides that no food products may be kept in cold storage for more than nine months. Food kept in storage longer than that period must be reported to the state health commission and if found unfit for use must be rendered into grease or tankage or otherwise destroyed. The date of entering and the date of leaving storage must be plainly stamped either upon the food itself or on the original package and these dates must be plainly legible on the receptacle in which the food is offered for sale to the public. All food consumed in Indiana will come under the regulation, as the law provides that storage products coming from other states shall not be sold unless bearing the dates of entering and leaving cold storage. A record of all such dates will then be kept in the health office. Heavy fines are provided for violations of the law which was advocated by Governor Marshall and was approved by both the health department and the cold storage interests. The stand is taken that under the new law cold storage food will be just as healthful as the fresh product.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

Makers of butter who work more water into their product than 16 per cent., which the law allows, will hereafter be prosecuted. Internal revenue collectors have been instructed to be on the lookout for such violations. For several years the Department of Agriculture has superintended the packing of several hundred thousand pounds of butter for the navy where not more than 13 per cent. of moisture is allowed. Commissioner Cabell says this is sufficient proof that the law can be obeyed without difficulty.

A bill to restrict the use of trading stamps in Ohio has been introduced in the assembly of that state. The new bill repeats the provisions of the present law, requiring that the cash redemption of all trading stamps be printed upon each stamp, and adds a provision that the stamps shall be redeemed in cash of an amount equivalent to the value of goods for which they may be redeemed.

A bill has been introduced in the Minnesota legislature prohibiting the sale of oleomargarine with any shade of yellow in it. Under the provisions of the bill every product that is not pure butter must be pure white. The words "butterine," "Jersey," "Holstein," or anything else to indicate that the "oleo" is of dairy origin, are prohibited.

Inspector A. W. Betting, of the Bureau of Chemistry of the United States Department of Agriculture, is the author of Bulletin No. 133 in which is described the preparation of cod and other salt fish for market including a bacteriological study of the cause of reddening. The further the bacteriological work on the cause of reddening of salt fish is carried the stronger the evidence becomes that it is due to factory infection, to the use of contaminated water, and to the methods of handling. The report gives much information on a subject with which all handlers of salt fish should be familiar.

To improve the quality of their product creameries throughout the country are adopting the paying-for-quality system in buying milk and cream from dairies. As the system becomes general in a district the creamery men should get together and agree on certain rules, the number of grades and the difference to be made in price in the grades.

In the proposed Canadian reciprocity agreement these articles of interest to dairymen and ice cream manufacturers are on both free lists: Fresh milk and cream, fresh fruits, except lemons, oranges, limes, grape fruit and pineapples on the American side—eggs, salt, etc. Condensed milk pays two cents a pound, maple sugar and syrup one cent a pound, coal forty-five cents a ton and cones twenty-five per cent.

In a published interview the captain of the steamer Salvador states that the crops of coffee now being harvested in Salvador and Guatemala bid fair to be record breakers. The yield in these two countries is so great that his steamer maintains a ten day's schedule and calls not alone at Acajutla but also at San Jose and Champerico (Guatemala) as well. He further says that though the harbor works at Santa Cruz are being pushed forward with all possible rapidity the commerce passing through that port is increasing even faster.

The United States Department of Agriculture has reported the conclusion of a case against F. A. Stuart & Co., of Marshall, Mich., manufacturers of Stuart's Catarrh tablets. The government analysis showed the preparation to consist of compressed tablets composed of sugar, talc, calcium, carbonate, containing as its chief active ingredient sanguinarin and flavored with sassafras and probably wintergreen. This analysis, reports the government, failed to show that the product contained drugs possessing therapeutic properties adequate to obtain the cures claimed for it. The manufacturers made no defense and were fined.

During the last crop season from November, 1909, to October 31, 1910, the exports of coffee from Guatemala were as follows: 93,696 sacks through the port of San Jose; 93.385 sacks through the port of Champerico, and 182,378 through the port of Puerto Barrios. This made a total of 369,459 sacks, of which 255,313 were clean coffee, and 114,146 coffee in parchment.

Ohio merchants and their representatives are much interested in a proposed bill to require the sale of goods from cold storage in containers so marked as to show that they have come from storage. Copies of similar laws in force in other states have been asked for by the state officials. Retailers have no objections to a measure which will inform them of the fact that the goods offered to consumers are from cold storage.

The city sealer of Milwaukee, Wis., has sent out large placards to wholesale grocers and commission houses of that city warning them that future violations of the Wisconsin and Milwaukee laws concerning weights and measures will result in immediate prosecution.

Maine lobster fishermen will be interested in the report that comes from Rhode Island that lobsters may soon be purchased for about seven sents a pair—if the experiments now being made by a group of scientists at the United States government hatchery continue to be practical. For the first time in history, it is claimed, the crustaceans are now being raised from the egg to the adult stage at the hatchery in Warwick. Prof. Mead, of Brown University, the first person to successfully hatch lobsters artificially, says of his work: "Including the cost of the breeding plant, with allowances for all necessary running expenses, we are now able to produce lobsters at an expense of less than $3 per thousand, or three and a half cents each. Hitherto it has not been believed possible to raise in captivity lobsters from the egg to the adult stage."

Reports of the Census Bureau from the slaughtering and meat packing establishments and slaughter houses of the United States show that during 1909 there were 68,403,000 animals slaughtered in those establishments for food. This includes 36,433,000 hogs. This total does not represent the total meat supply of the country, as a large number of animals are slaughtered on farms or elsewhere in slaughterhouses. In addition there were 411,300 animals reported as having been killed or as dying a natural death and consumed in the manufacture of fertilizers.

A bill has been introduced in the Massachusetts legislature by Representative Kenney, of Boston, which requires that every article of perishable food placed in cold storage shall bear a tag showing the date of storage, the date of removal from storage, etc., and providing penalties for the removal or alteration of such tags.

Butterfat is composed of nine different fats. All of them have the same basis, glycerine, which unites with one of the nine fatty acids, from which each one takes its name.

The government lately decided that Golden Egg Noodles and Golden Egg Seashell Macaroni, made by the Cleveland Macaroni company, Cleveland, O., contained little or no egg. The goods were declared misbranded, the company giving a bond of $1,000, and agreeing not to sell the goods under the labels under which they were found. Yando Egg Noodles, made by the United States Macaroni Company, Carnegie, Pa., according to government chemists did not contain sufficient egg to warrant the use of the word egg on the label and the company was fined for misbranding.

Frank G. Carpenter, the traveler and correspondent, says in one of his articles that in making bread in Jerusalem the dough is kneaded at home and brought in great lumps to the public ovens. These are to be found in almost every street. They are cave-like vaults running down below the street level. At the back of each vault is the oven, with a kind of dry well before its open door. In the well stands the baker with a long paddle in his hand, with which he puts in and takes out the loaves. The fuel used is olive wood and the oven floor is marked out in blocks, so that the baking of each family is placed on a separate block. The loaves are about an inch thick and the size of a teaplate, with a hole in the centre. The baker makes them from the dough, bakes them and returns them hot to the customer. He receives two cents for each half dozen loaves, or, if he prefers takes one loaf from each dozen baked. Before starting the baking he greases the floor of the oven with olive oil. The reason for these public bakeries is the high cost of fuel.

Consul C. E. Anderson, at Hong Kong, reports Chinese tea exporters expect an unusually good season in the trade of 1911. Any notable increase in the world's demand will be felt directly in China, whence most of the additional supply will come. China is by so great a margin the largest producer of tea in the world, the amount produced for its own consumption being the greatest thing of the sort in the world that it naturally becomes the world's great reserve in case of any extraordinary demand. A material increase in the price of tea in the world's markets would release all the tea the world will need for some time to come. Tea authorities in Europe seem to agree that a limitation in the world's supply is likely to be felt this year.

Prosecution, based on charges of misrepresentation, was brought by the health department of Columbus, O., against certain coffee solicitors, who in a house to house canvass, have been selling for a "high grade coffee" at 25 cents a pound a blend consisting of coffee mixed with a large percentage of chicory.

PENNSYLVANIA DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.
DAIRY AND FOOD BUREAU.

Rule No. 14, Revised. Issued May 5, 1911.

Rule No. 14, Revised. Confectionery and Chocolate.

Mineral substances of all kinds, whether poisonous or not, are forbidden in confectionery. The addition of any alcoholic liquor to confectionery is prohibited, and no alcohol may be added to it except as the alcohol occurs in the customary alcoholic tinctures or extracts used for flavoring purposes, or as a solvent for glazes.

The use of resinous glazes on chocolate and confectionery is not permitted for the reason that resins have no nutritive or dietetic value, but are known as the characteristics solid ingredients of varnishes, and that their introduction into foods would be repugnant to and not tolerated by the consumer if he were aware of the fact—so that their use in food would violate Clause 1, Section 3, Act of May 13, 1909, in that it would injuriously affect the quality and purity of the product concerned; also for the further reason that the resins, not being primarily intended for use in foods, are not gathered and handled in such manner as to fit them sanitarily for such use, and even, in the case of shellac particularly, are frequently admixed with poisonous or deleterious substances, such as sulphid of arsenic and litharge, so that their use would violate the spirit of Clause 6, and often of Clause 5, Section 3, of the Act above mentioned. This regulation, in its effect, is in harmony with Food Inspection Decision No. 119, under the National Food and Drug Act, June 30th, 1906.

Rule No. 15, Oysters.

Oysters and other shell-fish whose water content has been increased, whether by 'floating' or 'drinking' in fresh water or salt water of less density than that in which they have been grown, by the addition of ice or water, or in any other manner, will be deemed adulterated.

A STRANGE LENIENCY TOWARD SACCHARIN.

The partial enforcement of the national food and drugs act has resulted in considerable good. There is much reason to suspect that a great many other benefits would have been consumed upon the consumers if a little more rigor had been observed and a little less care taken not to punish too severely persons who were in the habit of sending out adulterated food products. It is perfectly proper for government agents to be conservative in their conduct. There is such a thing as being too radical. When men who have been sinning against the public health ignorantly change their methods after they have been enlightened nothing can be said against them. Those who persist in misconduct after having been fully informed belong to another class. They deserve no consideration whatever.

Some time ago the eminent chemists who were named by President Roosevelt as a referee board in connection with the controversy over the effect of benzoate of soda upon the human system, and who were continued as a permanent advisory board, decided that saccharine is a poison, dangerous to health. This decision was only arrived at after protracted investigation and as the members of the board have no interest in the matter beyond the public welfare there is no reason why it should not be generally accepted. For that matter it has been. The manufacturers of various food products who have been in the habit of using this substance as a substitute for sugar, however, seem reluctant to abandon the habit and bothered the cabinet officers who have jurisdiction for an extension of time. It seems a perfect absurdity and yet it was granted.

Orginally the order forbade the distribution of food products containing saccharin after July 1. But in obedience to the pleas of the manufacturers the time has been extended so that saccharin may be used until July 1, 1912. That is to say, a product which is pronounced poisonous and injurious to the human system, and which could be abandoned for the use of sugar tomorrow without any special inconvenience except a slightly enhanced cost of production, is to go into certain foods for a whole year yet because certain manufacturers do not wish to be put to the expense of using sugar just now; because they are fighting for all the time they can get. How many consumers, innocent of saccharin's presence in their food, will be permanently injured by this singular forbearance nobody can tell.

The law of Pennsylvania bans saccharin. Long ago the conclusion was reached here that such products are harmful to health. The experts employed by the federal government have confirmed that impression. The Dairy and Food Commissioner is charged with the enforcement of this as well as other laws regulating the manufacture and sale of food. By himself and his agents he is striving to carry out the mandate of the General Assembly without doing anybody any harm that has not been deliberately invited.

It is the theory of the Dairy and Food Bureau that laws are made to be enforced. Even a bad law must be obeyed by the citizens so long as it is on the statute books. There is so much the more reason why a wise act of assembly, one undertaking to drive out of the market all substances calculated to destroy health or shorten life should be faithfully and conscientiously enforced. There is not the slightest reason why the desires of a manufacturer who is knowingly using a substitute for sugar should be respected at the expense of the people who must accept the greater part of the food they eat upon trust. The fact that the consumer must trust the maker and the dealer is all the more reason why laws regulating the manufacture and sale of articles of food should be rigidly enforced.

Because the policy of the Dairy and Food Division has been based upon the fairest of principles it has not been customary to arrest and try to convict large numbers of citizens. Some manufacturers in older times did not know they were imperiling the lives of their patrons by the use of certain suspicious products. They knew, of course, that they were not furnishing an unblemished article. But they saw nothing wrong about that; it was merely one of the tricks of the trade. As soon as such makers or venders of food products were brought into the light and were convinced that they had been dealing in dangerous commodities they made haste to change their practice. Such persons did not beg the federal authorities to extend the period wherein they may use saccharin without running the risk of prosecution. They are not built that way.

Pennsylvania's law is right. It seeks to protect the people from fraudulent or poisoned food. It seeks to destroy the traffic in articles that have been rendered dangerous to health by the use of coal tar products or any other unwholesome ingredient. It believes a manufacturer or a dealer who has no conscience should be punished.

CONCERNING THE CHEAPER CANDIES.

Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust announces the undertaking by the Food Bureau of a highly important investigation. The subject of this undertaking is the cheaper candies, the so-called 'penny goods,' so largely consumed by the little folks and sold at the little shops and near the school houses. There has been a good deal of talk about these products, some alleging even that certain of the chocolates owe their color not to the delicious paste from the cocoa bean, but to paint stuffs or ochre; that some of the fudges contain arsenic in considerable amounts, that the bright hues that delight the eyes and fix the fancy of our little tots are not of wholesome vegetable kinds, but are undesirable dyes made from coal tar without due care as to their freedom from poisonous or unwholesome by-products, and that talc or soapstone is some times used to give weight, in place of wholesome food materials.

Parents are rightly concerned that their loved ones, too young to protect themselves and readily beguiled by deceptive appearances, shall, on the one hand, not be deprived of the little luxuries that at once serve to gladden their childhood days and to afford valuable nourishment to their active little bodies, and, on the other, that they shall not be exposed to injury in the house of their supposed friend, the candy-man.

It is likewise important if these vague charges are not well founded, that the interests of the confectionery trade, made up in the main of men of high character who have for years organized to keep their business free from abuses of the kind here mentioned, shall be freed from the shadow of such unpleasant suspicions as those above alluded to.

For these reasons, the Commissioner has arranged for a searching study of the cheap candies sold in Pennsylvania. For this purpose, about three hundred samples have been collected, about fifty by Special Agent H. P. Cassidy in Philadelphia, 225 by Special Agent H. L. Banzhoff in thirty-five cities and towns,and twenty-five by Special Agent C. C. Linton in six cities and towns, representing in all about forty-two counties of the Commonwealth. In the purchase of these samples, full care was taken to avoid duplication, so that the number of brands represented corresponds closely to the number of samples purchased. The nature of the goods bought is suggested by some of the brand names, such as "rain-bow suckers, almond tops, revolvers, hummer eggs, cigars, happy bunnies, strawberry plates, candy bolsters, candy sweet potatoes, candy fish, ice cream cups, red jumbos, lightning rods, tootsie rolls, flag suckers, lime barrels, ball player caramels, log cabin kisses."

These samples have been delivered to Dr. Chas. H. La Wall, of Philadelphia, Chemist to the Bureau, for complete analysis. When the work is finished the results will be published in bulletin form in order that the public may have full information about the nature of these curiously named sweets. It need scarcely be added that, if the findings show the existence of the bad practices above mentioned, the guilty will be vigorously prosecuted; but if they fail to appear upon this extensive examination, it is hoped that parents' fears may be allayed, the children's pleasure be no longer disturbed, and confectioners' interests freed from unjust annoyance.

ADULTERATION OF SAUSAGE.

Violations of law will probably continue so long as human greed gets the better of the principle of rectitude. Laws would not be necessary if men were perfect beings. Every now and then the State finds it necessary to strengthen existing laws by the enactment of new ones intended to meet new conditions.

Pennsylvania food laws have received an important addition this year in the act forbidding the adulteration of sausages, the chief provisions of which were printed in the last number of the Bulletin. This act was framed for the purpose of meeting and ending an evil that had grown to considerable proportions in this State.

For months past much of the sausage purchased by Pennsylvanians was not the genuine article, although customers paid sufficient to insure the best. There was some sausage, a considerable quantity of cheap cereal and as much water as the cereal could be induced to hold. Thus the manufacturer succeeded in clearing quite a profit.

Purchasers were not slow in discovering that there was something radically wrong about their sausage. It failed to answer expectation. It displayed a tendency to shrivel and shrink in the cooking. The cook every now and then was amazed and put in peril by a spouting geyser of boiling water emerging from the cooking sausage. Other singular things puzzled the housekeeper.

The new law provides a remedy for all this. Sausage must be precisely what it is represented to be when sold in this State. Dealers who violate the law are liable to suffer fine or imprisonment or both. The law will be strictly enforced. Men who deliberately plan to cheat the consumer are entitled to no sympathy. They will certainly receive none from the Dairy and Food Bureau of this Commonwealth. There is little reason to suppose the consumer will interest himself to plead for a remission of the penalty. Cheating the consumer is a peculiarly mean business. It robs them of their money, giving them that which is not food, or at least not the sort of food for which they have paid. It reveals a very unpleasant disposition in the manufacturer.

UNDRAWN POULTRY BEST.

The United States Department of Agriculture has recently conducted a series of examinations to determine the vexed question as to whether drawn or undrawn poultry is best in keeping quality. The department's verdict is decidedly in favor of the undrawn poultry, bearing no incision beyond those necessary for bleeding and braining.

The expert's deductions are based on eleven shipments of dry picked, dry chilled, dry packed, unwashed fowls, which were studied at every stage of marketing, from the packer to the consumer, the marketing throughout being in the market sense prompt. The effect of different methods of dressing in the case of delayed marketing is now under investigation.

After the experiments the following conclusions were reached:

That undrawn poultry decomposes more slowly than does poultry which has either been wholly or partially eviscerated.

"Full-drawn" poultry, that is completely eviscerated, with heads and feet removed, decomposes the most rapidly.

"Boston drawn" and "wire drawn" stand midway between the undrawn and the drawn in speed of decomposition. The "wire drawn," which is most like the undrawn, is usually the better.

The dressing of the carcasses was done according to three methods known respectively as "full drawn," "wire drawn," and "Boston drawn." For the "full drawn specimens the body cavity was opened by a transverse cut across the abdomen and the vent was removed by cutting around it. The head was cut off and the intestines and viscera completely removed. The heart, liver and cleaned gizzard, as well as the excess body fat, were put back into the body cavity. The shanks and feet were removed and the hocks were thrust through the opening in the abdomen and vent.

"Wire" drawing consists in pulling out a loop of intestine by inserting the finger through the vent, cutting the loop and drawing out the intestines by careful traction until it breaks at the gizzard. The vent of a bird so drawn presents a normal appearance; the only indication of drawing is the collapsed abdomen.

The "Boston" drawing is a modification of the "wire" in that a circular incision is made around the vent and the intestines pulled through until rupture occurs at the gizzard. The undrawn fowls were shipped with head and feet on.

CHEERFULNESS—A CLERK'S BIG CAPITAL.

The thought in the phrase "keep smiling," says a trade journal, is good. I never saw it and never want to see it carried out to the letter by a business friend. Those that do "beam whatever happens" are closely watched and well taken care of—we hope. A man that is a man can't be cheerful all the time any more than a man that is a man should be grouchy all the time. If you were born with a smile and kept it up—good for you. But if you are reincarnated into gloomy conditions and you keep fighting the gloom—good and good twice over for you. A clerk to be a success must cultivate cheerfulness. At times your smile may be a simper, but better a simper than a frown. The important thing is to realize it if you are disagreeable. Next thing is to go to work and plan to cut this characteristic out. It takes two big broad-minded men to do this—the one that tells you your weakness and you yourself.

"How much is that codfish a pound," said the customer. "That ain't codfish," said the clerk, "that's hake." That salesman had a grouch. Time and again he had been told about it. But he was either too stupid or too old to take points.

The moral is this: Learn the cheerful lesson if you must learn. The spirit of good feeling, of good hopes, good courage is already within you. The oftener they are used the happier you'll be.

ARTIFICIAL FRUIT RIPENING.

One of the most important rulings to come from the Federal Food and Drug Board was recently announced in Food Inspection Decision 133. The ruling prohibits what has been a practice in the fruit business for many years, that of selling fruit picked green and brought a long distance and put into a warm room to color up and ripen. The decision follows:

The attention of the Board of Food and Drug inspection has been directed to the shipment in interstate commerce of green, immature, citrous fruits, particularly oranges, which have been artificially colored by holding them in a warm, moist atmosphere for a short period of time after removal from the tree. Evidence is adduced showing that such oranges do not change in sugar or acid content after removal from the tree. Evidence further shows that the same oranges remaining on the tree increase markedly in sugar content and decrease in acid content. Further, there is evidence to show that the consumption of such immature oranges, especially by children, is apt to be attended by serious disturbances of the digestive system.

Under the Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, an article of food is adulterated " if it mixed or colored, powdered, coated or stained in a manner whereby damage or inferiority is concealed." It is the opinion of the Board that oranges treated as mentioned above are colored in a manner whereby inferiority is concealed and are therefore adulterated.

The Board recognizes the fact that certain variety of oranges attain maturity as to size, sweetness and acidity before the color changes from green to yellow and this decision is not intended to interfere with the marketing of such oranges.

Commenting on the decision the Grocery World and General Merchant says the importance on the ruling is seen in the fact that almost all fruits that are brought long distances, such as oranges, bananas, tomatoes, and many others are necessarily picked green because in no other way could they be fit to sell at the end of the long journey. As they are still more or less unripe when they reach their destination, it is the universal custom to ripen them up by putting them for a time in a warm damp room. If this is to cease the fruit will all have to be picked ripe and the effect upon the industry, market and prices will be marked.

LOOKING INTO THE CANDY SITUATION.

Professor Charles H. LaWall, of Philadelphia, has been designated by Dairy and Food Commission Foust to investigate the different varieties of candy sold in various sections of this Commonwealth. There are millions of candy consumers in Pennsylvania and it is important that the article sold them should be pure and free from poisonous ingredients.

The candy samples have already been collected by the agents of the bureau and are now in the hands of the Philadelphia chemist. He will give the matter his immediate attention, making a careful analysis of the contents of the samples and in due time make report for the information of the people of Pennsylvania who ought to be and doubtless are very much interested in such enforcement of the laws of the State as will make an end of all sweets injurious to the human stomach.

Many of the samples were purchased from candy stores located in the neighborhood of public schools in the various cities and towns of the State. Most of this candy is known as "penny goods," such as "all-day suckers," marshmallow bananas—painted yellow—marshmallow pies and many other varieties bearing all sorts of names. It is supposed by many that this cheap candy is peculiarly liable to adulteration. This investigation will enable the Dairy and Food Bureau to make the exact situation known.

Commissioner Foust is awaiting the result of this interesting investigation with considerable eagerness. Professor LaWall will prepare a bulletin on the subject. The professor is one of the best known and most competent chemists in the country and the result of his important labors in the direction specified will be generally accepted as a true revelation of the candy situation as it actually exists in the State of Pennsylvania at the present time.

It is the conviction of Commissioner Foust that the young people and all others who are fond of sweet things are entitled to the protection of law. Good candy is healthy and a necessary food for the growing child, but adulterated goods are very dangerous and should be barred from the market. If there is any unfit candy now sold in the State an effort will be made to drive it out of our markets and to keep it out.

CONCERNING VARIOUS BRANDS OF MOLASSES AND SYRUPS.

Dr. William Frear, of State College is about completing his report concerning one hundred and thirty samples of syrups and molasses, including maple syrup, manufactured and sold in the markets of the Commonwealth.

The samples were purchased by an agent of the Bureau, specially delegated to do the work in order that there may be no duplications. These samples were manufactured by many different firms and were put on the market under many different names or brands.

It seems quite probable that some prosecutions will follow the investigation both for adulteration and misbranding. Of course it is greatly to be desired that this anticipation should fail of realization, for it is always extremely gratifying to realize that the markets of the State are practically free from adulteration. But if adulterated or misbranded goods are sold anywhere within the Commonwealth it is well that the fact should be known and the guilty party punished.

Dr. Frear is also preparing a bulletin on the subject of this important investigation which will be printed for free distribution in due time. This is one of the most extensive investigations of the molasses question that has ever been undertaken by any State or even by the federal government and the result ought to be illuminating and instructive. Already many applications have been made for data upon this subject. These requests will be complied with as soon as the bulletin appears.

What the young folks don't know about the difference between the molasses of to-day and that of sixty years ago will do them no harm if the manufacturers are producing a good article, free from adulteration. If it contains no poisonous substance by way of adulteration we suppose nobody has any right to complain. But some of the old folks are sure that there is something radically wrong in the quality of the molasses on the modern market. It may be simply imagination; still, all the venerable lingerers on the shores of mortality will probably insist upon it that there is no genuine molasses to-day. The Bulletin believes they are mistaken. Whether they are or not will be determined by Dr. Frear's investigation, the results of which will soon appear in bulletin form.

PERSONAL APPEARANCE AS AN ASSET.

It costs little effort and trifling expense to keep clean in person, wear good and neat clothing, have shoes shine and linen unsoiled, remarks The American Grocer. Neat appearance is a valuable force in trade and particularly in a retail business. No one likes to have food handled by an untidy person. Neither do they relish unclean habits. The other day we entered one of the highest class retail store in ——— and asked for Shrewsbury crackers. The clerk dipped his dirty hands into the box, and used them instead of a scoop to put the crackers into a scale. Do you imagine we will again try that store?

We have seen the clerk do the same thing with high cost candy, to the great disgust of the buyer who sought the finest goods, but whose sense of cleanliness and fitness of service was hurt by untidy action. Then there is the moral effect which in such cases loses the advertising power or endorsement of a person of influence. No one can work about a store and keep their hands in such sanitary condition as will warrant using them as scoops.

Untidy clerks are an index to an untidy store, stock and service. Someone has said about the worst article to deal with on this score is the "dude" clerk,—the cigarette-smoking, high-collar, la-de-da boy, who works-all-week and-has-all-his-money-spent-by-Saturday-night kind; the kind that has "to break open the baby's bank Monday morning to pay the laundry bill." These are the "limit" and the only thing to do is to avoid them.

Even untidy customers dislike an untidy store and service—while everybody loves to see clean and bright things arranged with order and system. Why not then gratify the public instead of repelling interest in the store by easily avoided bad habits and unattractive helpers? Untidiness and bad manners are a source of continual loss. It pays to avoid them, and it pays better to have people advertising the fine appearance of the workers and the store.

SELLING PRODUCE BY WEIGHT.

Some months ago we referred to the action of the Grocers' Association, of Cleveland, Ohio, in establishing a system of selling by weight, which has appeared to give satisfaction, not only to the grocers themselves, but to their patrons, says the New England Grocer. At least it would seem that this action has given satisfaction all around, because there is, we understand, a bill now pending in the house at Columbus, designed to compel grocers throughout the State to do what the grocers of Cleveland voluntarily conceded. If we remember correctly the National Association has advocated this bill, that of selling produce by weight. This is decidedly an advance move and one which we think might well be emulated by other states. We do not think it is practicable for cities and municipalities to create ordinances of their own to regulate such matters; indeed, it has been proved time and time again that such acts are futile, and unless the legislature of a State will enact legislation nothing of any account, or nothing that will be effective, can be done.

There does not seem to be much question as to the justice of selling produce by weight, not only vegetable, but eggs, for example, and even fruit. We all know that most dealers will either intentionally or involuntarily pick out the smallest eggs and the smallest turnips and the smallest oranges when selling a dozen of either. The hand seems involuntarily to be drawn toward the smallest eggs and the smallest turnips and the smallest oranges. In any case weight is the only fair standard to sell by. No one can dispute that there is more value in a dozen large eggs than a dozen small eggs, and we believe that such a law should be made universal, to include liquids; molasses, for example, should be sold by weight instead of by measure, as every one who has measured and bought molasses in the wintertime can readily understand. The outcome of the attempt in Ohio to secure State legislation in this direction will be watched with great interest by the rest of the country.

THE STRAWBERRY.

The strawberry, the queen of fruits is a native of both America and Europe, according to the Grocers' Criterion. The early colonists found it growing in abundance throughout those portions of this country early settled, and there are records of the discovery of berries in the meadows which were one-half inch in circumference, and bushels of them that were from three to four inches. It would appear from this that the large size berries have not been entirely the product of cultivation.

Roger Williams mentions that they were one of the fruits growing naturally and abundantly in those parts, and a learned doctor of England was wont to say that God could, but never did, make a better berry. Sometimes they were so abundant in the early days that they could be picked by the bushel.

Cultivation began in Europe early in the seventeenth century, and the berry responded freely to the improved opportunities to develop, but it was not until later, when berries were introduced from Virginia and Chile, that they really flourished as they might do. The strawberry is of the same family as the rose, but the fruit is not the fruit at all. It is like the fruit of the rose turned inside out, and the pips or seed are carried on the outside of the pulp instead of the inside, as in the case of the rose. The cultivation of the berry has increased the quantity of the pulp and the flavor has been improved, but the nature of the berry remains the same, as it has been through all the ages of its existence.

The Chilean berry was taken first to California, and from there distributed through the country. The same berry was taken to France, but it was not hardy enough to stand the climate of the British Isles. From this Chilean berry, crossed with the native, varieties have come the most famous of the cultivated berries.

Some growers incline to the belief that the wild berry has imparted none of its characteristics to the cultivated sorts but others say that the wild berry has made the cultivated hardy, and there are those who declare that the wild berry is responsible for the excellent flavor of the present cultivated sorts. Of course, questions of this sort are more for the discussion of horticulturists than for the layman. Perhaps the average person is more concerned with obtaining a sufficient supply than he is with their origin.

The quantity of strawberries produced increases. And the consumption outruns production. In a city like New York, for example, the berries are coming throughout every month of the year, with the possible exception of November and may be December. But there are strawberries from the south for Christmas, and by this time it is possible to buy them in as large quantities as may be desired at relatively small prices.

During the summer it is not unusual for 100 cars to be received in one day and distributed before night. This indicates in some degree the enormous demand for them.

They begin to come from the distant south early in the year and the march is steadily northward, ending in New York State in August. They are shipped in small baskets, holding one quart each, packed thirty-two in a crate and arrive in excellent condition. The grower gets something like three or four cents for his berries at the field side. The consumer pays as high as twenty-five cents at times, though of course not when the season is at its height. The hothouse berries sell at high prices. It is not unusual for the first arrivals to sell for $1 a quart, though that high range of value does not last very long.

Even though the cultivated berry is consumed in such enormous quantities, it never quite compensates for the delicious dew-kissed wild berry which is buried deep in the grass of the meadow. The flavor of that berry once enjoyed will never be forgotten and will always be used as a standard for judging the berries which grow in the gardens. The little barefoot boy with his lips of red made redder still, kissed by strawberries on the hill, knows secrets which the city dweller never will discover and his standard of strawberries is so much higher than that of the city consumer that it will never be the same.

THE USE OF STARCH.

The use of starch at the hands of laundresses and careful housewives began about 365 years ago, and it is said to have originated in Flanders, says Harper's Weekly. It came into popularity in England in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, whose courtiers and ladies wore ruffs of cambric too large to stand firm without artificial stiffening. The starch of the Elizabethians was like that of modern times except that it was colored, and it gave delicate tints to the huge linen contrivances of the fashionables of that day. Before Elizabeth's time ruffs were not of cambric, but of fine Holland, which required no stiffening, and was very costly. It is recorded that when the queen had ruffs made of lawn and cambric for her own use, none of her friends could tell how to starch them, but the queen made special call for some women who could starch them, and Mrs. Guilham, wife of an official of the royal household, was the first starcher. In 1564 a Flemish woman, Frau van de Plasse, came to London and established there a school to teach starching. The school succeeded and the frau from Flanders became rich. She charged a high price for each lesson, with an additional charge for a recipe for making starch out of wheat flour, bran and roots. Among the nobility the favorite color was yellow—rather odd when we remember what the modern house-keeper thinks of yellow clothes. The ultra-fashionable folk preferred green. Appropriately enough, our Puritan forebears used blue starch although many of them did not approve of starch at all. They classed it among the idle trumperies of life.

GROCERIES IN MEXICAN CITIES.

Grocery stores in Guadalajara are of two kinds—those which make a specialty of liquors and those that do not. Both carry the ordinary stock of canned goods, etc. The average stock of the latter will consist of 85 per cent. of American goods, five per cent. of English, and the balance French and Mexican products, says the Food Law Bulletin.

There is another notable difference. Should a store be owned by a Frenchman there is a greater per centage of French canned goods and less of American. The same is true if the proprietor is an Italian or other European, indicating the value of any country having its citizens in foreign trade centres to stimulate the demand for home-made goods to which they are accustomed.

Mexican rice, sugar, flour, salt, laundry soap, candles, brooms, coffee, biscuits and crackers are sold, as a heavy protective tariff keeps out foreign products of this class.

English stock consists chiefly of preserves of large variety and good quality, also various teas, breakfast foods, etc. The English preserves are well known for quality, but grocers have told me that they order them at times just to be sure not only of quality, but that the packing will be first class, and they would oftener order some good brand of American preserves were they sure of having the goods arrive unbroken and as ordered, because a shipment from the United States arrives more promptly than from England.

French goods are sardines, mushrooms, olives and olive oil.

American goods are canned meats, oleomargarine, preserves, pickles, baking powder, coffee, condensed milk, fine laundry and cleaning soaps, hams, bacon, cheese, plug and smoking tobacco, chewing gum, nuts, and dried fruits, mops, fireless cookers, etc.

Denmark sends canned butter at about 47 cents a pound. American butter costs more, and the Danish packing and method of preservation are superior to American, for the latter does not keep so well as the former. The Danish can has a double top, the lower part of which fits snugly, but is easily removed.

ONLY PAYING FOR GOOD EGGS.

The Department of Agriculture has begun an active campaign for the improvement of farm eggs, especially in the middle west, says the Grocers' Magazine. An investigation two or three years ago showed that an enormous loss was sustained annually as the result of spoiled or deteriorated eggs, vast quantities of bad eggs resulting from ignorance, carelessness or indifference, and unsatisfactory methods of marketing. While the actual money loss has fallen mainly on the farmers the loss in quality is borne by the consumer.

The efforts so far have been directed mainly towards education to better methods, co-operation with egg buyers and the authorities. Most of the work so far has been in Kansas, which is said to be the largest egg producing State. Men from the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture are visiting the farmers and urging upon them the necessity of keeping eggs intended for market in a cool, dry place, and of marketing them frequently. The men sent out are well schooled in poultry raising and have often given the farmers excellent hints. The Bureau has also obtained the co-operation of the egg buyers of Kansas, and the "loss-off" or quality system of buying was brought into use. Under this plan bad eggs are rejected, and only the good ones paid for. The State authorities have helped the cause along by prosecuting, under the State laws, cases where bad eggs were sold. The movement in Kansas has been so successful that it has spread into other states, and there are now movements on foot to secure uniform legislation, with a view to establishing the loss-off system of buying, at any rate, during the warm months.

AMERICAN FOODS GREATEST IN VARIETY AND MODERATE IN COST.

Benjamin Karr in an article on the Inland Grocer and Butcher, says every official report upon the markets of the European countries which are the most prosperous and best fed of the Old World states confirms the impression that American travelers get of short national bills of fare, when they go abroad. It is not a difference in the quantity of the food eaten, but of the comparatively narrow choice of vegetables and fruits especially, which the average householder in Europe has under ordinary circumstances.

Few eatables known and prized in Europe are wanting in America, but many things familiar here are lacking there. Americans notice the difference when they go abroad, and Europeans who come to the United States to live are soon conscious of the greater variety of food within their reach here.

England, for example, the country which spends more for food, in proportion to its population, than any other State in Europe, gets along with scarcely a taste of green corn, and hardly anything is known of sweet potatoes. There are practically no watermelons and muskmelons are a costly luxury grown in hothouses or else imported from Spain or Italy.

Americans miss cranberries in the fall and winter and maple sugar and maple syrup in the season when the buckwheat cakes are "ripe" at home. They miss the buckwheat likewise. Ice cream and ice cream soda water are fast gaining ground in Great Britain but they are still comparatively rare.

There are striking differences in the fruit. England has nothing to correspond with the common grapes of America. Spanish grapes —the Malagas of commerce—are cheaper in England than they are in this country, but hardly as cheap as California grapes are in their season, and there are no grapes for those who cannot afford to pay more than the common grapes bring in September, October and November, in American cities and towns.

The contrast is more marked in peaches. In England they are a costly luxury, never sold anything like the common prices in the United States, nor in any such quantities. Rich men owning large grounds often grow them under glass or trained against a sunny wall, and some are imported from southern Europe, every peach wrapped in cotton and sold at a fancy price. The working classes scarcely know the taste of a peach.

Pineapples are sold in larger quantities in Great Britain than they were within the past few years, but a recent official report places the price of that fine fruit at from 50 cents to $1.45 apiece, for good pineapples, the highest figures being reached about Christmas. Through the winter it is common for the market to range from $1 up to $1.20 or to even $1.30 apiece. Oranges are used in England in large quantities and are as well known through the United Kingdom as they are in the United States, but the prices are higher for fine fruit. The supply is obtained from Spain, Italy, the West Indies, Palestine and North Africa, and to some extent from California. The large seedless "navel" oranges from that State sell at from 9 cents up to 12 cents apiece in England and in other parts of Europe. This British scarcity of low priced fruits, of several kinds which are cheap and common in America, does not apply in like degree to warmer countries such as Spain, Portugal and Italy. Grapes, oranges and melons are cheaper and more commonly used there. Peaches are also more abundant and not so costly.

But on the other hand such fruits as raspberries, strawberries, gooseberries and currants are larger and finer in England than they are in the Mediterranean countries. All of them are common, of course, and cheap in the United States. Taking vegetables and fruits together there is no part of the Old World where the supply is as varied, so generous and so cheap as it is in America. In certain countries some fruits and some vegetables are more plentiful and more perfect than the average American stock in an ordinary season, but there are shortcomings which more than offset these points of European superiority. Altogether Uncle Sam has the most ample bill of fare, with the greatest variety and the lowest average cost that any country sets for its people.

OPTIMISM.

Fra Hilfertus in the Retailers' Journal:—

By Description—

Optimism means faith in your house, faith in your goods, faith in yourself.

Optimism sells goods, sells them well, sells them to stay sold, builds business.

By Explanation—

Mental attitude affects efficiency.

Optimism is a mental attitude.

There can no enthusiasm without optimism.

By Comparison—

Show me a pessimist and I'll show you a man that has failed or who will fail.

By Analogy—

Pessimists on our force are a serious menace to the building of business.

Pessimists are the rents and holes in the sails of the ship of business.

A sufficient number will leave the ship hopelessly at sea and at the mercy of the waves.

It wouldn't be so bad if they drowned, but they drown everybody on shipboard.

By Elimination—

This company can not and will not tolerate pessimists. They must go.

By Conservation—

Pessimism poisons the very blood of business.

There is but one antidote—enthusiasm.

By Condition—Pessimism is a condition of the mind.

So is enthusiasm.

So is optimism.

By Creation—

Optimists create and build business.

Pessimism destroy the execution of the best plan.

By Decision—

We have room at the top for optimists.

We have no room at all for pessimists.

By Description—

Success comes in cans.

FUTURE EGG PRICES.

It would be a very difficult matter at this time to anticipate market of next year with any degree of accuracy, remarks the Retailers' Journal. There may be just as many industrious hens at work as during the year and the total sum of the eggs laid may be as great for this year as last. But the conditions of handling hens has met with such great change that the results to follow would be very hard to measure. In the communities very far removed from the centre of civilization eggs are abundant and cheap during the laying season. These eggs are desiccated and sent into commerce for use by bakers, confectioners, etc. They come on the market during the winter months when fresh eggs are expensive and made to answer the purpose. In the season when eggs are plentiful and cheap many thousand of cases go into cold storage for similar use during the winter months.

Recently there has been such a wholesale condemnation of desiccated eggs by the pure food officials it would appear that the cheap eggs heretofore desiccated will have to be sold fresh or go to waste, unless some better method can be devised for preserving them for use at a period when fresh eggs are high.

The probability at present is that the putting away of eggs in cold storage for future use will not be practiced to as great an extent as in the past. It has been the custom to sell as many of these cold storage eggs as possible for family use, and to turn over to the baker, confectioner and other manufacturers those eggs that could not be disposed of to others. Dealers who have made a practice of putting away April eggs will not do much in that line this season. They are afraid of many things they know and have a further fear of the unknown.

The cold storage lawmakers are disturbing them. The talk in Illinois is for a three months' bill. Until it is known just what cold storage law will go into effect. Not many eggs will go into cold storage. These eggs and the desiccated eggs will not be on the market next winter, and the withdrawal of this product will have a tendency to make winter eggs very high, while eggs in the laying season will be extremely low. Possibly the men who prepare the desiccated eggs for the market will find a better way of doing so than they have used in the past, for there has been an enormous quantity of this stuff condemned by the State and Federal Food Commissioners. There is a need for good desiccated eggs, but they will have to average up better in the future or people will be afraid to buy them. If the output of desiccated and cold storage eggs is to be restricted we will no doubt have to pay big prices for eggs next winter

GOOD AND BAD NUTS.

Harrisburg, Pa., ——— Nuts to crack; a curious legal puzzle. 'What is a nut anyhow?' asks State Food Commissioner Foust. If you bought some nuts, and upon cracking them, found no kernels inside, would they really have been nuts at all? Or if you bought and found say one-fifth of them with kernels shriveled, darkened and mouldy, would you think the lot bought by you consisted of diseased nuts?

These are some of the hard nuts Judge Baldridge, of Blair County, is now trying to crack.

The Commissioner explains that recently these questions were raised in an argument on arrest of judgment in a prosecution against a nut dealer in Altoona. The indictment was drawn under that clause of the food act which declares an article of food to be adulterated 'if it consists of ——— a diseased, contaminated, filthy, or unwholesome animal or vegetable substance.'

The defense was represented by O. H. Hewit, Esq., of Hollidaysburg, the Commonwealth by General Counsel A. H. Woodward, of Clearfield, and Hon. J. D. Hicks, of Altoona, and Dr. William Frear, of State College, was present to give such expert information as the Court might request.

The Commissioner insists that the questions raised are, however, not merely curious, but exceedingly important in their possible effect upon the scope of the food law. For Counsel of the defense argued that the law was evidently intended to apply solely to manufactured or manufactured food products, and not at all to such as are sold in the state of nature. The Commonwealth, on the other hand, denied the correctness of this interpretation, until the Supreme Court decision of this State call for such interpretation of this beneficial act as shall effectually carry out its purposes, and asked the Court to rule that in such cases where articles are concerned, such as nuts, apples, and potatoes for example, which appear as separate units in the lots sold, the word 'units' applies to the several units.

Owing to the importance of the questions raised, it is the opinion, says the Commissioner, that however the lower Court may decide, the case is likely to be appealed for a ruling by the higher Courts.

THE PERIL OF THE HOUSE FLY.

More information has been diffused during the past year concerning the habits and the perils of the common house fly than at any previous period.

There is reason to believe that the agitation has not been fruitless. Many citizens have bestirred themselves to aid in the campaign against this insidious foe.

This is a season when vigilance cannot be relaxed with safety. The fly is very persistent and not easily rebuffed. Screens are not always effective in thwarting the efforts of the intruders.

Householders should pay special attention to the condition of their surroundings. They have exclusive jurisdiction over their own premises and can keep them so clean as to discourage the fly and make an end of its progeny before they are born.

As to the neighbors, often enough they will accept a hint in good spirit. Sometimes the example of vigilant cleaning up will stir them to imitation. It is surprising how much good one may do just by setting an example.

Some of the people encourage the breeding of flies through positive ignorance. They know the insect has always been a summer visitor. They see no reason to suppose it will not be with them every summer. Nobody has told them any better.

Suppose while you are cleaning up about your yard you engage your neighbor in conversation. Suppose you take him into your confidence, telling him what you are doing and explaining that cleanliness is sure death to the fly and all his brood.

After the man or the woman, as the case may be, has listened to you for awhile and seen the excellent example you have set, there will probably be immediate and effective imitation. Many of the faults of our neighbors may be cured by a good example and a few illuminating talks.

Enough has now been developed concerning the character, habits and general career of the fly to make it certain that the insect is more deadly than the tiger, more poisonous than the rattlesnake, more to be feared than the cobra. And this is no sentiment or fuss and fury but downright fact. Each reader of the Bulletin should strive by might and main to reduce the fly population and thus increase the chances for human longevity. Time spent in creating an environment that will be deadly to the fly is always time well-spent.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

Swat the deadly house fly.

Encourage neighborhood cleanliness.

When you know a good thing about food products tell your neighbor.

Parents will await with much interest the result of the inquiry into the condition and quality of the cheaper grades of candy.

The ignorant mother will end the earthly life of many a promising child before the summer comes to an end.

Considerable vigilance needs to be exercised in the purchase of vinegar. There are still enterprising individuals who will persist in selling "cider" vinegar that never saw a drop of genuine cider.

It is a difficult thing to believe in the honesty of any manufacturer who deliberately adulterates the food of the people with substances injurious to health.

The fly will not bother you greatly if the surroundings are free from filth.

Providence is very kind and long-suffering. But not even Providence can do much for the child whose mother takes no care of it during the heated term.

The new milk law of the Commonwealth promises to benefit the babes and all others to whom a diet of pure milk is essential. It will be vigilantly enforced.

Imprisonment for a stated term is a fitting punishment for the vender of rotten eggs. A dealer in such unwholesome products has no conscience. The State should intimidate him by the severity of its sentences.

During the coming year this Bureau will issue several special bulletins dealing with matters in which the people of Pennsylvania are specially interested. Its purpose is to be of genuine and continuous use to the people of the Commonwealth.

The verdict against saccharine was unanimous and is not controverted. Its use in Pennsylvania is unlawful.

A dead fly will harm nobody if it is cremated immediately after death. A live one should be hunted as you would hunt the tiger. It is quite as dangerous.

Pure milk is essential for the invalid and the babe. Hence the desire of the legislature to insure its production and sale in the State.

Science is a very useful and helpful institution. The more its principles and discoveries are diffused the better.

An increase in the drug habits of the prohibition districts of New England is observed by Dr. Cabot of the Massachusetts General Hospital, who ascribes it to the difficulty of obtaining liquor. "The moment you limit the use of alcohol," says Dr. Cabot, "you increase the use of drugs. Nothing is more sure than that men accustomed to the use of alcohol will come to use morphine if alcohol is withheld." According to the New York World there is similar testimony to the growth of the cocaine habit in the south under prohibition, and the conditions may well engage the attention of advocates of compulsory abstinence. The World remarks that if legislative prohibition is exerting the adverse influence of driving men to narcotic drugs as substitutes for whiskey and beer, it is defeating its object.

The Minnesota legislature has passed a law that absolutely forbids the sale of oleomargarine the color of which in any way resembles butter, no matter how the color is produced. The bill was introduced in the Senate by Senator Benson, of Nicollet county, and a similar bill was introduced in the House by Representative Holmberg. The bill had the backing of the Dairy and Food Department, former Commissioner French and the dairymen's and butter and cheese makers' association and its passage is the result of concerted work on the part of all interested.

A bill has been introduced in the Illinois legislature which provides for a prize of $100 for every baby born in the State, $200 for twins and $300 for triplets. The State of Illinois pays a heavy tribute in population to Texas through immigration every year and the method employed by the statesmen of the Sucker state in offsetting the work of the foreign immigration agent by encouraging the work of the stork is to be commended. If this bill passes Illinois will be the first State in the Union to put a premium on baby raising, though practically every State in the Union offers prizes for the encouragement of every other line of industry.—Texas Secretaries' Bulletin.

A recent ruling of the Federal meat inspection service permits the use of marrow from shank bones for food purposes under certain conditions. The ruling says: "The marrow of shank bones from carcasses which have been inspected and passed may be used for food purposes, provided the bones are handled in a sanitary manner."

A bill passed at the recent session of the New Jersey legislature will go far towards lessening the vast quantity of aged food that has for years been forced upon the people of that State. The law provides that it shall be unlawful for persons or corporations engaged in cold storage warehousing to receive any kind of food unless the package containing it be marked with the date of its reception, or to send out from warehouses any package unless similarly marked. Governor Wilson's attitude on cold storage abuses was stated in his inaugural, in which he denounced the practice of dealers to seclude immense quanaities of meats, poultry, eggs, fish, and other foods in seasons of plenty in order to keep prices high even if such food had to be kept for years before being sold. The passage of the bill was the result of an investigation of the storage business in Hudson county, in which one-half of the food for residents of New York has been stored.

"The meats of this country have recently been subject to violent attack," says Food and Dairy Commissioner Wright of Iowa, "and whatever the merits of that controversy it is a fact that since the enactment of the national pure food law, during which time State officials have been specially active, no single case of adulteration of meats with chemicals has been discovered. If meats were chemicalized, they are not so now. The national meat inspection is as nearly perfect as we can possibly expect any human agency to be."

There are four countries that export corn, the United States, Argentina, Russia and the Danubian provinces. In 1906-07 the United States led in the volume of exports. Since then Argentina has been first, exporting in 1909-10 a total of 2,270,000 tons, against 782,000 tons from the Danube; 705,000 tons from the United States. The demand for corn for export has fallen off greatly since 1906-07, when exports aggregated 6,065,000 tons, against 4,285,000 tons in 1909-10.

A retail price list issued in 1879 was found by a grocer at Watkins, Pa., which gives the following interesting quotations: In July, 1879, butter sold at retail at 10 cents a pound; cheese at 7 cents; eggs, 12 cents a dozen; dried apples, 2 cents; live chickens, 7 cents a pound; sirloin and porterhouse steak, 12 cents a pound; round steak, 10 cents; shoulder steak, 8 cents; roasts, 6 to 9 cents; chickens dressed, 10 cents; pork, 7 cents; shoulders, 7 cents, hams, 12 cents, and other prices in proportion.

Farm Machinery remarks:—Don't let it worry you if someone else gets some business. The man or firm never existed that could sell everyone everything they needed. If you were the only dealer in your county, there would be some buyers who would go to the adjoining county to make their purchases. If you are inclined to be jealous of the customers who visit your competitor's place think that probably he has the same feeling about those who go to you. If either or both of you were out of business they would buy their goods somewhere else and the world would go on just the same. Forget that you have a competitor at all, and your business will be better for it.

A correspondent of the Pennsylvania Grange News writes: I believe we should awaken to the fact that we as producers of pure butter should try to educate the consuming public that the very best grade of oleomargarine today is colorless or rather of a white color. The producers of oleo have so poisoned the mind of the consuming public that they believe the enforcement of the oleo law in this State is nothing more than a method to drive the poor man's butter—as they call it—from his table and get an exorbitant price for his—the farmer's—butter. The best grade and lowest priced oleo on the market today is the white oleo. The poorer grades and higher priced oleo is yellow oleo, the difference in price being regulated not so much by the quality of goods but by the amount of yellowness that can be injected into its manufacture. This done it would not be so hard to get convictions against illegal oleo dealers in this State.

M. Groun states that he found some injurious elements in milk from cows fed with cake adulterated with mustard seed. According to Reyne Scientifique the practice is unfortunately too common and the frauds is in this case is of a truly criminal character, for while a lamp oil is extracted from mustard seed, the essence of the mustard, the harmful constituent, remains in the oil cake which is really only fit for manure and should never be given to cattle. White mustard, which is much less poisonous, should not be given to animals except as green food, before it flowers. Farmers should be thoroughly instructed on this subject, for they ignorantly allow cattle to eat these cruciferae indiscriminately. If all cruciferae are not poisonous they all taint milk and should never be grown except for industrial purposes. Infants whose organisms are very delicate and whose only nourishment is milk, should be protected against the unscrupulousness of some oil cake manufacturers.

Hoard's Dairyman:—The State of Wisconsin is to be unreservedly congratulated upon the reappointment of Hon. J. Q. Emery as Dairy and Food Commissioner. This appointment was made despite the active opposition of various individuals and interests that have felt more or less aggrieved by the impartial and effective effort of the Commissioner to have them comply with the laws enacted by the State legislature for the protection of purchasers of food products and medicines, and also of honest and honorable manufacturers of and dealers in such products. The Governor of the State in making this reappointment, and the Senate in unanimously confirming it have conferred upon Mr. Emery a merited and well deserved compliment.

PENNSYLVANIA DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.
DAIRY AND FOOD BUREAU.

Rule No. 14, Revised. Issued May 5, 1911.

Rule No. 14, Revised. Confectionery and Chocolate.

Mineral substances of all kinds, whether poisonous or not, are forbidden in confectionery. The addition of any alcoholic liquor to confectionery is prohibited, and no alcohol may be added to it except as the alcohol occurs in the customary alcoholic tinctures or extracts used for flavoring purposes, or as a solvent for glazes.

The use of resinous glazes on chocolate and confectionery is not permitted for the reason that resins have no nutritive or dietetic value, but are known as the characteristics solid ingredients of varnishes, and that their introduction into foods would be repugnant to and not tolerated by the consumer if he were aware of the fact—so that their use in food would violate Clause 1, Section 3, Act of May 13, 1909, in that it would injuriously affect the quality and purity of the product concerned; also for the further reason that the resins, not being primarily intended for use in foods, are not gathered and handled in such manner as to fit them sanitarily for such use, and even, in the case of shellac particularly, are frequently admixed with poisonous or deleterious substances, such as sulphid of arsenic and litharge, so that their use would violate the spirit of Clause 6, and often of Clause 5, Section 3, of the Act above mentioned. This regulation, in its effect, is in harmony with Food Inspection Decision No. 119, under the National Food and Drug Act, June 30th, 1906.

Rule No. 15, Oysters.

Oysters and other shell-fish whose water content has been increased, whether by 'floating' or 'drinking' in fresh water or salt water of less density than that in which they have been grown, by the addition of ice or water, or in any other manner, will be deemed adulterated.

FIFTEENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE ASSOCIATION OF STATE AND NATIONAL FOOD AND DAIRY DEPARTMENTS, AT DULUTH, MINNESOTA.

August 21 to 24, 1911.

The convention was opened by President Flanders, of New York, at 10 A. M. on Monday, August 21st, in the convention hall of the Commercial Club, with delegates in attendance from nearly every state having a pure food law, and from the United States Department of Agriculture.

The association was welcomed to Minnesota by His Excellency, Governor A. O. Eberhart, in a short speech replete with wit and good sense, and to the city of Duluth by Mayor Marcus B. Cullom, whose cordial words put the delegates at once into touch with the breezy hospitality of this Zenith City of the Unsalted Seas.

The response on behalf of the association was made by the Hon. R. L. Cochran, of Colorado, who, not being present, lacked the advantage of hearing the speeches to which he was to respond, but failed not of eloquence because of reason so trivial. The tribute to the beauties of Duluth was adorned by reference to the sun-lit, snow-capped, glorious peaks of the speaker's home state.

President Flanders' address dealt with the fundamental principles underlying food legislation and the conduct of the control work. It will be found on another page of this bulletin.

The following committees were appointed:

On Credentials:

H. F. Potter, of Connecticut, Chairman.
Fitz Randolph, of New Jersey.
James Foust, of Pennsylvania.

On Resolutions:

L. Davies, of Washington.
J. H. Wallis, of Idaho.
Wm. Frear, of Pennsylvania.
H. F. Potter, of Connecticut.
A. H. Jones, of Illinois.

Monday afternoon:

A. H. Jones read a paper on "Original Importers' Packages and the Labeling of Packages in Intrastate Traffic that Have Been Imported into the State as Part of the Original Package."

An interesting and valuable discussion, opened by Hon. W. B. Barney, of Iowa, occupied the following hour.

Tuesday morning:

The report of the Committee on Co-operation, appointed at the last convention, was presented by the Chairman, Dr. S. J. Crumbine, of Kansas.

The reports of officers and committees occupied the rest of the morning's session.

The afternoon was occupied with an important paper by Dr. Herman Harms, of Utah, on "Uniformity Between the Weight and Measure Provisions of the Federal Law and the Weight Provisions of the State Laws," and a most excellent discussion by Dr. Julius Hertvet, of Minnesota, on "Composition of Evaporated Milk," which will be found on another page of this Bulletin.

In the course of the discussion of the latter paper, Dr. Taylor, State Chemist of Louisiana, noted the fact that the directions for dilution printed on many brands of condensed milk called for the reduction of the product to a point far below that normal to whole milk, with the result that infants are often insufficiently fed, when condensed milk is used for their nourishment. Action was taken upon this point, upon recommendation, printed elsewhere, of the Committee on Resolutions.

Owing to the absence of Hon. J. S. Abbott, of Texas, to whom had been assigned the subject: "Distinctive Names and Proprietary Products," the discussion was opened by Dr. Wm. Frear, of Pennsylvania, and interestingly occupied an hour of the session.

Wednesday morning:

The morning session was devoted to the subject, "Standards in Their Relation to the Enforcement of Food Laws," ably opened by Dr. C. D. Woods, of Maine, and to a discussion of "Sanitation in the Manufacture and Sale of Food Products," opened by a paper prepared by Dr. Wm. C. Woodward, Health Officer of the District of Columbia.

The afternoon exercises included a discussion of "Cold Storage in its Relation to Food Products," opened by Hon. R. M. Allen, of Kentucky, and a most excellent address by Dr. B. H. Rawl, Chief of the U. S. Dairy Division, on "Milk: Production, Handling, Distribution." This paper will be found printed on another page.

The evening of this day was given up to meetings of the food executives and chemists. The Association of State Food and Dairy Executives was opened by the president's address.

The following topics were discussed:

Followed by Hon. E. F. Ladd, North Dakota, .. 5 minutes.

Limited to three-minute talks.

"The Chemical Laboratory; should it be located at the headquarters of the Control, or is some other arrangement more conducive to efficiency?"

Opened by Hon. H. E. Barnard, Indiana, ... 10 minutes.
Followed by Hon. A. H. Jones, Illinois, ... 5 minutes.
Hon. W. P. Cutler, Missouri, ... 5 minutes.
GENERAL DISCUSSION, ... 15 minutes.
Limited to three-minute talks.

ROUND TABLE CONFERENCE:

"The Conduct of the Legal Side of the Work; should this lie with the Attorney General or with the Commissioner through Special Counsel?"

ELECTION OF OFFICERS:

President:
James Foust, of Pennsylvania.

W. D. Saunders, of Virginia.

H. M. Potter, of Connecticut.

The meeting of the chemists took the form of a round-table conference dealing with the interpretation of vinegar analyses, the meaning of the word 'alum' and with the presentation of evidence. Officers were elected with instructions to prepare a program for the following year and to take any other action they may deem advisable. The officers chosen were:

President, Dr. Wm. Frear, of Pennsylvania,
Secretary, Dr. J. C. Bryan, of Illinois.

Thursday:

The topics discussed this day were: "Butter; Defined, Pure, Adulterated, Practical Methods of Determining," by Hon. Joel G. Winkjer, of Minnesota; "Butter Substitutes: Protection to the Public, Restrictions on the Manufacture of," James Foust, of Pennsylvania, printed elsewhere in this Bulletin, and "Health Exhibit Train: Object, Methods and Results," by Dr. Oscar Dowling, of Louisiana. All these subjects evoked full discussion.

The afternoon session was devoted to election of Officers and report of committees.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President, Dr. Lucius P. Brown, of Tennessee,
First Vice President, Dr. H. E. Barnard, of Indiana.
Second Vice President, C. H. Billingley, of Alabama,

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON RESOLUTIONS WHICH WAS UNANIMOUSLY ADOPTED.

The resolutions reported by the Resolutions Committee to the pure food convention, as the net result of its deliberations, are given below. The committee consists of L. Davies, of Washington; James H. Wallis, of Idaho; A. H. Jones, of Illinois; H. F. Porter, of Connecticut; and Wm. Frear, of Pennsylvania. The resolutions thanked the city, the state, the governor, the mayor, the Commercial Club, J. G. Winkjer, A. E. French, and others who helped to make the meeting a success.

The other resolutions follow:

The Food Laws.

"Resolved, That this association reaffirm its belief in the importance for the sake of all concerned, that the national and state food laws should be based upon the same broad principles, and that so far as practicable under the conditions existing in the respective states, should follow the general form and language of the National Food and Drug Act of 1906.

Co-Operation.

"Resolved, That this association expresses its heartiest appreciation of the work of its committee on co-operation, and its sincere thanks for their report presented at this convention, outlining a comprehensive plan for practical co-operation among the states and the United States in the enforcement of food laws, and that this association recommends that the said plan be adopted and followed for the good of our work, and further

"Resolved, That we extend our thanks to the United States Department of Agriculture for the most valuable aid afforded by it in the working out and perfection of that plan.

Oleomargarine.

"Whereas, The small group of manufacturers producing oleomargarine still continues its efforts to induce congress and the several state legislatures, to remove altogether the legal obstacles to the unrestricted imitation of butter, and

"Whereas, Such a backward step in legislation would remove the obvious natural mark by which the buyer can readily distinguish the dairy product from that of the oleo factory, and thus make easier the deception of the buyer, and deprive hundreds of thousands of dairymen of what may be called their trade-mark.

"Resolved, That this association reaffirm its recognition of the importance and maintenance the body of law regulating the oleomargarine industry and of preserving, for the welfare of both consumer and dairyman, the requirement that oleomargarine shall be so made as not to resemble in its tint that of yellow butter.

Uniformity.

"Resolved, That this association recognizes the great importance and urges the adoption of uniform food sanitation laws by the several states to the end that all our American food products may be produced, manufactured and distributed under the most cleanly and hygenic conditions.

Net Weight Labels.

"Resolved, That this association respectfully recommends and urges that congress, promptly enact into law the pending Mann-Stevens bill, requiring that all packages of food be branded with the true net-weight or measure.

Misbranding.

"Whereas, That inasmuch as the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of United States vs. Dr. A. O. Johnson, has limited the scope of application of that clause of the national food and drugs act that prohibits as misbranding the use on the label of deceptive and misleading statements and devices.

"Resolved, That we earnestly urge on the congress of the United States and the legislatures of the several states that have incorporated in their law this phraseology of the national food and drugs act, and that they enact amendment to their respective laws that may carry into effect the recommendations of President Taft in his message to congress on this subject.

Milk Supply.

"Resolved, That this association heartily commends the excellent work of the dairy division of the bureau of animal industry, looking towards the improvement of milk supplies, and urges upon congress the importance of more liberal provisions for the continuance of such work.

Condensed Milk.

"Whereas, Many of the directions for use printed upon the containers for evaporated milk and sweetened condensed milk give to the consumer no sufficient information as to the dilution of the product requisite to reducing it to its equivalent of normal milk, and therefore, doubtless lead in many cases to over-dilution for infant feeding, therefore be it

"Resolved, That this association earnestly urges upon the legislatures of the several states, the desirability of requiring that the labels under which these products are offered for sale shall state the proportion of water to be added in order that the concentration be brought back to that of whole milk.

Bacteriology.

"Resolved, That we recommend the appointment by the president of this association of a committee of five bacteriologists, members of this organization to report to our next meeting, its recommendations as to applying the methods prescribed by the department of agriculture for bacteriological tests, having due regard for the skill and experience necessary in adopting new and intricate methods, where special education and training are necessary.

Cold Storage.

"Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed by the president of this association with instructions to study the subject of cold storage, and to draft a measure to be presented at our next annual convention, which shall incorporate in its provisions just and reasonable regulations for the operation of cold storage warehouses, and the storage of foodstuffs therein.

"Resolved, That the thanks of this association are hereby tendered to President George L. Flanders for the able manner in which he has presided over the deliberations of this convention, and also to Hon. W. M. Allen, our efficient secretary, and to Hon. James Foust, treasurer, for their watchful care of the interests of this organization committed to their charge. Our thanks are also due to the executive committee for the excellent program prepared for this meeting."

PRESIDENT FLANDERS' ADDRESS, AT DULUTH.

In my closing remarks to this body at New Orleans last year I stated: "Justice and equity should be the mark to be aimed at but the rule or standard for that justice or equity must be the mission or commission given by the duly constituted authority. With that view of the case we shall continue to be as we ought to be, a government by law rather than a government by men."

Such a condition would be in harmony with all the fundamental ideas entertained by the fathers in establishing this government and would make sure to the sensitive business public a proper freedom from individual fiat which, if allowed to exist, is liable to be mercurial in its tendencies depending, of course, largely upon the personnel of its source or origin. Such a condition or source of authority would be hazardous and as disturbing to the business world as internal terrestial disturbances are to the physical world, their action not being known or anticipated until the event.

Taking this as a correct fundamental proposition, it makes the law under which we work the sole charter of our powers, duties and obligations as officials and executives and as such it confers, and the limit of its conferring is the limit of such powers, duties and obligations, eliminating personal notions of what the law ought to be or of the executive's right to pass upon the wisdom of the law. The courts have said over and over again that it is not within the province of the court to pass upon the wisdom of the law, but it is rather within the province of the court, first, to inquire what is the law and, second, to ascertain whether it contravenes constitutional provisions. I am of the opinion that this very ably defines the attitude in which each executive who is charged with enforcement of the statute must find himself, to-wit: what is the law? Having determined this question he, unlike the courts, must assume that the law is constitutional, presumptively, leaving the question of whether it does or does not contravene the constitution to be raised by those who are opposing its enforcement, in whole or in part, who will find means and ways to present that question to the court for its interpretation. As to whether the law is wise or unwise, whether its policies are correct or incorrect, is not the responsibility of the executive, and for that reason he should offer no apologies for its existence. It is presumably a deliberate action on the part of the legislative body as a representative of a sovereign people and is presumptively a crystallization of the will of that people.

The enforcement of the statute as it stands, in good faith and without modification is the duty of the executive, but in doing this he should remember that the law-abiding citizen who is struggling in a competitive world has probably also examined the statute with care to determine his rights, obligations and duties. It is his chart also. At this point there is chance for a difference of judgment or opinion as to the meaning of the law and the danger therein is that he who seeks to do something will so construe the statute as to weaken its restrictions in his favor or to unduly strengthen or enlarge them to curtail the movements of a competitor. If the commissioner does not agree with his construction, then criticism follows which is anything but exhilarating to official comfort

On the other hand, zealous executives who are working earnestly for what to them seem to be not only good but proper results, should be careful not to so confound their ideas of what the law ought to be with the law itself as not to be able to distinguish clearly the line of demarcation, for such a blurred state of mind will inevitably produce litigation that may be an unwarranted hardship upon the trade which by its reaction may ultimately be a final financial burden upon the consumer, because the courts will invariably determine equitably the meaning of the statute; at least I so believe.

In view of this statement I will call attention to the attitude that executives as well as attorneys should in my judgment hold to the courts by telling you a story of an attorney who said to the court: "Your honor, the rule of law in such a case as this is so and so," to which the court replied: "That is not the rule of law." Whereupon the attorney quickly, tactfully and respectfully responded: "Your honor, that was the rule of law until this last decision of yours." The decision having once been made, it is an additional source of knowledge or information for the would-be law abiding citizen and helps to determine the rights, duties and obligations of all concerned.

Thus far the part played by the executive, that is, the work of the dairy and food commissioner, is purely executory or ministerial in character, providing that he has not enlarged the scope of it by the injection of personal notions or views. If he has, to just that extent the work becomes personal so far as he is concerned and may become persecution and may be restrictive of personal and public rights. To illustrate, in one of the states of the Union there is a statute providing that condensed milk shall be manufactured only from pure, clean, healthful, fresh, unadulterated and wholesome milk from which the cream has not been removed either wholly or in part, and in which the proportion of milk solids shall be in quantity the equivalent of twelve per centum of milk solids in crude milk and of which solids twenty-five per centum shall be fats. This statute, of course, applies to a commodity which is manufactured and sold as and for condensed milk. It does not restrict or regulate the manufacture of condensed skimmed milk nor any other condensed commodity, yet certain business interests have attempted to convince the executive officer in that state that such a statute must be construed as absolutely prohibiting the manufacture of condensed skim milk, and to that extent have had their attorneys prepare a brief to be presented which on the face of it would seem to leave the impression that the executive had a right under the statute to reach forth a restraining hand and stop the manufacture of condensed skimmed milk notwithstanding the fact that an appellate court in the same state has held that the law is not so restrictive and does not so apply.

Laws of this character are supposed to be enacted under the police power of the state; a power not possessed by the national government, but which is inherent within the state for the purpose of protecting the lives, health, and morals of the people. The exercise of this power is not intended to reach the extreme of paternalism, but the laws passed under it are for the purpose of protecting the public, that is, for the public weal. The fact that the line of demarcation between the police power and the ordinary law powers is not distinct, renders it important that persons seeking to procure the enactment of statutes professedly under that power should have sufficient knowledge and be sufficiently conservative so as not to transcend the power to the extent of producing a reaction. He should bear in mind the old maxim that he who comes into court asking equity must come with clean hands, and the other "He that hath his cause just is thrice armed."

The laws that have been enacted in the different states and in the nation have been so enacted at the instance of public sentiment and demand. That demand was superinduced by the knowledge of the existence of fraud—the result of predatory commercialism—such commercialism predicating its assumed rights upon the assumption that its action was the result of competition rendered necessary by the public demand for cheap food products, all of which was based upon a false premise in so far as it is presented or defended in that light. The underlying fundamental principle that has promoted such frauds in the past has been commercial greed. Such action has produced resentment and reaction that has resulted in the statutes now upon the books of the several states and of the nation against commercial free-booting. Such statutes have met with the approval of the best manufacturers and producers and they stand to-day among their warmest sponsers and supporters anxious with us that these laws, in so far as they are equitable and just, shall stand, and in so far as they are not, that they shall be so amended as to properly fall within that category. When we contemplate that these enactments were necessary and were the result of a reaction of sentiment which demanded that restriction should be put upon the right of the freedom of contract—a right that is scarcely fundamental in our institutions and which should never be allowed to be contravened except when necessary for the protection of the rights of the people as a whole—then we have a glaring example of the results that are produced by not adhering to, or properly observing equitable rules in contract. It is the opinion of the writer that this example should stand as a warning against undue enthusiasm in enacting laws under the police power. In other words, he who seeks to remedy an evil, claiming to do so in the interest of the people, should be careful that he does not produce enactments that overstep the bounds of equity and justice and in the interest of one portion of the people, rob another portion of its rights; because if he does, we may expect, in the light of the reactions referred to in this paper, that a reaction in the opposite direction will set in the minds of the people, or a portion of them, and become sufficiently strong ultimately to nullify some of the good results produced which should not be lost.

It is within the writer's knowledge that in the State of New York, in an attempt to preclude from food products harmful preservatives, that a bill was drafted and enacted by the legislature into a law which provided as follows:

"No person shall sell, offer or expose for sale, any butter or other dairy products containing a preservative, but this shall not be construed to prohibit the use of salt in butter or cheese, or spirituous liquors in club or other fancy cheese or sugar in condensed milk. No person, firm, association or corporation shall induce or attempt to induce any person to violate any of the provisions of this chapter. Any person, firm, association or corporation selling, offering or advertising for sale any substance, preparation or matter for use in violation of the provisions of this chapter shall be guilty of a violation of this section."

When this bill became a law it was believed that the use of preservatives in the state of New York, other than those excepted, were doomed and that the puzzling problem confronting the people of the state was solved. Immediately after its passage the department charged with its enforcement commenced active operations against violators. Among other violators was a man named Biesecker. The specific allegation made against him in the complaint was that he, on June 27th, 1900, at his store, No. 59 Murray St., borough of Manhattan, city of New York, did sell a substance, preparation or matter called Preservaline, which was declared by him to be a preservative of butter or other dairy products; that said substance, preparation or matter called Preservaline is a preservative and is not salt to be put into butter or cheese, and is not spirituous liquors to be put into club or other fancy cheese, and is not sugar to be put into condensed milk; that the defendant did sell the said substance, preparation or matter with the intent and recommendation that the purchaser should manufacture it, mix or compound it with, or add to it natural milk or cream and other dairy products and then sell the said dairy products containing the said preservative."

The action was brought on for trial on Dec. 11, 1900. The defendant demurred to the plaintiff's complaint, that is, in other words, admitted all that the plaintiff alleged, denying nothing, and leaving it to the court whether such action constituted a violation and, if so, whether the law was constitutional or not. The court found for the defendant, holding that such a law was unconstitutional. An appeal was taken to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, which court after due hearing affirmed the decision of the lower court, holding the law to be unconstitutional. From this decision the people appealed to the court of last resort of that state (The Court of Appeals), and that court in considering this case held the following doctrine, to-wit:

"While the police power of the legislature has its limitations, each of which cannot be accurately stated, except as required by the particular case under review, generally speaking, the following propositions as to legislation relating to articles of food may be deduced from the authorities:

1. That the legislature cannot forbid or wholly prevent the sale of a wholesome article of food.

2. That legislation intended and reasonably adapted to prevent an article being manufactured in imitation or semblance of a well known article in common use and thus imposing upon consumers or purchasers is valid.

3. That, in the interest of public health, the legislature may declare articles of food not complying with a specified standard unwholesome and forbid their sale.

It further held as follows:

"Nor is it a legislative determination in the interest of public health that preservatives, other than those specified, are unwholesome adulterations of dairy products, since it does not make the introduction of a foreign substance into them, however deleterious an adulteration, nor an adulteration illegal, except where the substance is introduced for the purpose of preserving them, which is a proper and lawful object in itself; the provision is, therefore, unconstitutional and void, because it absolutely forbids the sale of articles of food when they contain any other preservatives than those specified, even though they are not rendered unwholesome by the use of such ingredients."

Thus the statute which was intended to allay all the evils resulting from preservatives was lost, the good parts with the bad, simply because in drawing it its advocates had gone too far.

With the thought in mind superinduced by the experience above quoted, I would counsel conservative progress on the part of dairy and food commissioners in demanding legislation in the interest of the people to the end that they do not make the mistake of getting results that are against those interests. Careful and earnest research should be made before launching a statute to see that it is well within the lines or limits of the courts' decisions to the end that when it once has been enacted it may stand with no reactive influence.

Elsewhere in this paper I have stated, as I see it, the province of the dairy and food commissioner as an executive officer. In making that statement I was not, however, unmindful of the fact that too often his opinion is asked as to what legislation should be enacted on the ground that his experience is probably such as to equip him with extraordinary knowledge of what should be the statutory requirements. Therein lies a temptation to take advantage to advise possibly extreme action to cure some particular evil and possibly without due thought as to the effect of such statute upon other and possibly greater questions. Such advice is usually personal in its nature possibly based upon experience of an official character and while it may be wise from all points of view that have come under the observation of the commissioner, it may not meet public approval, in which event it becomes a matter for public criticism and to just that extent is a violation of the principle that law should be the crystallization of the will of the people.

Enforcement of Laws.

In enforcing the food laws there are three questions which must receive careful consideration:

1. Are the goods to be considered an adulteration within the meaning of the statute?

2. If they are such, is the adulteration a permissible one, that is, one which will not prevent the sale of the goods, and

3. If so, are they properly labeled under the requirements of the statute?

These questions are to be determined by the findings of the chemists or other scientists employed by the executive. There is usually little or no difficulty in determining the first, namely, as to whether the goods are an adulteration within the meaning of the statute, but the second proposition as to whether their sale is permissible is quite different, that is, the question resolves itself into the proposition: Is any ingredient in the product offered or to be offered for sale poisonous, deleterious or harmful? The determination of this question will determine whether the goods can be sold. Here the executive reaches a point in his work in which he must rely absolutely on his chemist or bacteriologist for determining the fact. It must be borne in mind that the executive officer cannot stop or forbid the sale or recover a penalty for the selling of goods upon the market until he has first proven that their sale falls within the prohibition of the statute. It is a matter for proof on his part. He cannot accuse the defendant and thereby make him presumptively guilty, forcing him to an affirmative defense in which he must prove that his goods are not poisonous, deleterious or harmful, but he must prove affirmatively that his goods are. In such a case, if we are proceeding civilly, we must have a preponderance of evidence; if criminally, our evidence must be beyond a reasonable doubt. Therefore, if the chemists who are passing upon a given commodity fail to agree, the case becomes doubtful. If the number taking opposite sides are equal so that the evidence on both sides of the case is equally balanced as to numbers, the transaction without doubt fails. Certainly such would be the result where the preponderance of evidence is on the side of the defense.

Not long since in a discussion I presented this view of the case before a lay audience and was answered by a gentleman who has had sufficient experience to have made a better distinction than he did, to the effect that if men refuse to act in this world because other men disagree, nothing would be done because men have disagreed or failed to agree from the beginning of time. This is a good illustration of an attempt to blind men's eyes to real facts and he who uttered it is evidently not aware of the fundamental maxims underlying the prescriptive constitution, the organic law of antiquity, and they are the necessities of a constitutionalism, of governments that are accusatory and not inquisitorial and confiscatory. The maxims to which I refer are as follows:

VERBA FORTIUS IS RELATED TO IMPORTANT RULES.

Among these are:

FAVORABILIORES REI POTIUS QUAM ACTORES HABENTUR: Defendants are rather to be favored than plaintiffs.

ACTORE NON PROBANTE REUS ABSOLVITUR: If the plaintiff does not prove his case the defendant is absolved: or, in other words:

SEMPER PRAESUMITUR PRO NEGANTE: The presumption is in favor of him who denies; or, in other words:

ACTORI INCUMBIT ONUS PROBANDI: The burden of proof lies on the plaintiff; or, in other words:

The burden of proof depends on him who holds the affirmative.

The principal maxim and its cognates are the datum posts of numberless rules, discussions and cases.

This of itself is a criticism without warrant yet effective in producing dissatisfaction that is damaging to the cause and discouraging to the executive officer. It matters little how much men disagree either on essential or non-essential points so long as the disagreement affects the views of no one except those who entertain them, but when that disagreement is of such a vital nature that legal conclusions depend upon it, it is quite a different matter and to hold the two up as similar or analogous is to utter that which acts as a self-reflecting criticism which will be recognized by the earnest, discerning mind although it may become the cause of criticism which will ultimately produce in the mind of some a belief that there exists official inactivity. Such sophistry as this should be indignantly criticised and rebuked by earnest, honest officials wherever met and it should be insisted that the enforcement of the features of any food or drug law based upon the question of the healthfulness, wholesomeness or harmlessness of the commodity or an ingredient thereof, must primarily rest upon the shoulders of the scientist or expert. If he fails in his duty, either through lack of knowledge or otherwise, the work is crippled. If this work is so done that the experts agree in their conclusions, then the facts can be presented to the court unequivocally and with confidence for its consideration. Otherwise the case will have elements of doubt in it, and it is a well known principle that the benefit of all doubts is given to the defendant, which probably would spell out defeat and defeat when once heralded in the papers is a great encouragement to the would-be violators and leaves a department in worse shape than as though no prosecutions had been undertaken.

When a decision has been rendered by the court it should receive due respect, which means that you must either abide by its decision or take the appeal that the statutes provide to the higher courts, in which event, when a final decision is reached, you have then ascertained in full and complete the meaning of the statute of your state as applied to the given state of facts. If the facts are not right, it then behooves us to start the next case on a different state of facts or call the attention of the legislative body to the weak spots or defects in the statute as pointed out by the court, remembering at all times that our courts are our arbiters of last resort and should be and are above suspicion.

MILK: PRODUCTION, HANDLING, DISTRIBUTION.

By Dr. B. H. Rawl, Chief Dairy Division, Washington, D. C.

Milk is perhaps the most difficult food that we have to control. It is important from the health officer's standpoint, because it is a disease carrier. It is important from the food commissioner's standpoint because it is easy to adulterate and the adulteration is hard to detect. Great advances have been made in milk control during recent years, but notwithstanding this fact, there is still need for more attention to milk than to any other single foodstuff on the American market.

Its satisfactory control requires not only good laws well enforced, but a great educational campaign as well, because milk can never be controlled until the consumers contribute their due support to that control.

In some states one officer looks after the adulteration of milk, another is responsible for its sanitation. In other states the same officer looks after both lines. In some states the state commissioner approves the appointment of all local or city inspectors, while in others this is entirely under the city health officer; but in none of the states is there sufficient means available for adequately safeguarding the public against the dangers and the frauds that are involved in this commodity. Since the question of milk control involves the state dairy and food commission, the state health officer and all of the city health officers, it is impossible to discuss my subject from any one particular standpoint, because milk production is inseparably connected with milk control. With your permission, therefore, I shall consider it from a general standpoint, hoping thereby to bring out some of the requisites of a system that will satisfactorily safeguard the public so far as this commodity is concerned.

If you will agree that there are not at present sufficient facilities for properly looking after the milk supplies of the country, then you agree also that all who are charged with this work should act in harmony for one common end. This should be done for the sake of economy, even if it were not necessary for other reasons. But what is this common end that we are all seeking? It is a clean, unadulterated and safe milk supply.

Co-Operation of Cities.

The milk problem is one of our great national problems, which, in the main, confronts every state and every city alike. It is essential, therefore, to the best results, that there should be uniformity of action not only between the states, but more particularly between the cities of a state. The state official, whether required by law or not, should occupy a position of leadership. In his hands is intrusted the enforcement of state laws, under which city laws must be made. He, as a representative of the state, is a representative of the cities as well, and why should the authority of state and city be not harmoniously distributed in this as well as in other governmental matters? I do not undertake to say how this should be done, but we cannot but realize that as a general thing there is not enough harmony and co-operation between the two classes of officials, neither of which can get the best results without the assistance of the other. In taking this position with reference to state officers, I am assuming that they have as much interest in the work of the dairy farm inspectors employed by the cities as have the city health officers.

Inefficient Inspectors.

It is a deplorable fact that the average dairy farm inspector is totally incapable of performing the duties of his position. This inefficiency is often due to politics, such positions being used as a means of paying off political debts. In such cases the appointees may have been first-class bartenders or second-class blacksmiths. For such conditions there is no relief except by the public, for so long as it is willing that a department charged with such important duties shall be misused for political purposes, just so long must it pay the penalty.

But inefficient inspection is not due to this cause alone. True it is that there is almost always a lack of men who are qualified as dairy farm inspectors, but this is due largely to the fact that there is not a demand for men with such qualifications. The appointive officers often do not themselves recognize what qualifications are necessary for this work, nor is it to be expected that they should, for men capable to perform all of the duties of health officers (and such appointments are often made by them), should hardly be expected to have also a practical knowledge of dairying. But there is a way to overcome this difficulty and I shall refer to it later.

Inspectors Must Have Dairy Training.

Without qualified inspectors, dairy farm inspection amounts to naught. Suppose building inspectors knew nothing about building construction, or elevator inspectors knew nothing about elevators, or engine inspectors knew nothing about engines, what would all that inspection amount to? Likewise the inspection of dairy farms by men who know nothing about them amounts to nothing.

Suppose an inspector goes to a farm, as is often the case, and tells the farmer that his permit is revoked because of this or that, and then is not able to tell the farmer how he may, in a practical way that the farmer is able to employ, remedy the difficulty. What will be the outcome? The farmer will likely get indignant and denounce all inspection as a fraud and a menace to honest business. The farmer usually manages in some way to get another permit and goes on selling the same kind of milk that he sold before, or else he goes out of the business; and in either event what has been accomplished in the interest of good milk? The dairy farmer must be taught, then if he can't or won't be taught he must be prosecuted.

Kind of Training Required.

Inspectors do not require a thorough scientific knowledge of milk or of sanitation, for one thoroughly trained man on the force acting in the capacity of a chief inspector can, in a short while, give them all of the training that they need regarding these two subjects, but they must have practical knowledge of the fundamentals of economic milk production; first, because by this means more than by any other are they able to get the farmer's confidence; and second, the giving of assistance of this kind helps to keep down the cost of good milk, which is directly in the interest of the consumers, whom the inspectors represent.

Dairy Schools.

Such training can best be had at the dairy schools. Often a short course of two or three months is sufficient, and some of the dairy schools are now giving such courses for milk inspectors. The others will probably give them just as soon as there is sufficient demand for them. I have given this consideration to inspection because it seems to me to be inseparably connected with production so far as the control officer is concerned.

The Milk Producer.

Milk producers may be divided into two general groups. First, those who produce good milk; and second, those who produce bad or unsafe milk. The first group I shall pass by. The second may be subdivided into two classes. First, those who are dishonest, and are not willing to recognize that they have a right to produce milk only when they comply with the law and supply an article that is safe for consumption. Second, those who are honest, are not wilful law-breakers, and would not intentionally do anyone injury, but who are probably prejudiced and ignorant of the dangers that may accompany milk, and who think that most of the modern requirements of health officers and food officials are nonsense.

For the first class there is but one remedy, the strong hand of the law. They should be put out of the business of milk production as quickly as possible for the good of consumers and producers as well. For this class the inspector must be a police officer.

The second class contains, in my opinion, the majority of the average milk producers of the country. Many of them have been in the business for years and their business has possibly grown steadily less profitable, due to higher cost of feed and labor, more sanitary requirements, a lack of advance in the price of milk that is in keeping with the advance in the cost of feed and labor, the lack of progress in economical production, etc. But it is this class that must, in the main, furnish us with good milk if we ever get it.

The fundamental problem, therefore, underlying the entire milk question is: How are we going to get the average dairyman to produce good milk that can be used in safety? Can it be done by force? No. It must be done largely by education and the inspector should be the educator. The consumers must realize, however, that it costs more to produce good milk than bad milk. Much harm to the cause of good milk has in many cases been done by those who, while very zealous in the interest of the consumers, have been unfair to the producers in demanding of them more than the prices they received would warrant.

Inspector's Duty.

The qualified inspector begins his work realizing fully that he must make himself sufficiently helpful to the farmer to obtain thereby the farmer's confidence and friendship. His first object, therefore, is to determine how this can best be done and usually the quality of the herd is the first thing that should be taken up, because the average herd is usually producing little more than half what a good herd will produce. The necessity of these records can be explained and sample sheets supplied. The farmer soon learns from his records and is surprised that some of what he regarded his best cows are unprofitable. The inspector is often able to suggest a change of feed that will bring better results at a smaller cost. I have often seen the profits of a herd doubled in this way in but a very short time. Of course while this is going on, minor improvements in sanitary conditions can be secured if the inspector uses tact, but just as soon as the dairyman realizes that the inspector is helping him to make his business more profitable, the real work of improving the sanitary condition can begin, and then the improvement along sanitary and economic lines should go hand in hand. The inspector must at all times be careful not to attempt to lead the farmer faster than his means will permit him to follow.

Too much stress is usually laid upon sanitation from the standpoint of clean milk, and not enough from the standpoint of economic production, because a very large part of the sanitation that is necessary for clean milk is also necessary for the most economic production and the farmer is much more willing to provide it in the latter case than in the former.

Let this educational work continue until the farmer becomes a first-class practical dairyman and most of the troubles with sanitation are over so far as the producer is concerned.

Organization of Inspectors.

Each force of inspectors should work under a chief inspector who is well trained. It should be his duty to select inspectors and teach them. They should be brought together at least once a month for a conference, practice work in scoring, etc. In fact, he should be responsible for the milk inspection service.

In towns or cities where there are not sufficient funds available to employ chief inspectors, the state department should co-operate with the city department and supply part at least of such service as would be rendered by the chief inspector.

Once a year all of the inspectors of a state should be brought together for a week's meeting, so that the whole service could be steadily improved.

Transportation and Distribution.

If the consumer is to get good milk, it is of course necessary that the farmer produce good milk. But this alone is not sufficient, for suitable methods of transportation and distribution are equally essential. Delayed transportation in hot railroad cars is of course very bad, and distributing plants are often sources of contamination and adulteration. Thorough inspection of these is of course necessary, but it is less difficult than the inspection of the farms.

The Consumer.

The consumer must bear his part of this burden. It matters not what kind of inspection is provided for, unless the consumer does his part the inspection is not going to secure good milk. He must recognize that good milk costs more than bad milk and that the producer is entitled to a fair profit. In the larger cities the producers get just about half what the consumers pay for milk.

At present the average consumer takes milk from the man who will sell it to him the cheapest, without any consideration for its quality. Many physicians even do this. The farmer, therefore, who goes to the expense of supplying clean and safe milk, as a rule gets no more for it than the one who produces milk in the cheapest possible way.

The public must therefore be educated. The schools offer one of the best opportunities for this, but the school teachers must be taught, and here again comes in the work of the health officer and the chief milk inspector. The consumer must be taught how to properly care for the milk in the home, for much harm results here.

If I may be permitted to speak frankly, there is not enough harmony of purpose and action between state and city officials. Often jealousies arise that operate to the disadvantage of both. This is a tremendous problem and even with the most harmonious action much, for the present at least, must remain undone. The state officials, however, occupy natural positions of leadership and it is for them to work out and develop broad and comprehensive systems that will effectually handle this great problem.

BUTTER SUBSTITUTES: PROTECTION TO THE PUBLIC, RESTRICTIONS ON THE MANUFACTURE OF—

By James Foust, Dairy and Food Commissioner,
Harrisburg, Pa.

The subject given to me has been so much discussed that it is hard to find anything new to say about it; so hard, indeed, that I shall not try it. Old as the subject is and as much as it has been lawed about, it remains a matter of constant discussion, an important object of our care, a critical matter to handle for every American food executive.

In considering what regulation the oleomargarine trade requires at the present time, we must take account not only of the nature of this article, but also of the history of its trade.

As to the nature of oleomargarine the two points of chief importance to us are covered by the statements, first, that it is a food; and second, that it is an imitation.

It is a food because it is simply a mixture of digestible and nutritious substances taken from several common food articles. With the present government inspection of the oleomargarine manufacture, it is probably as free as most foods from uncleanliness and other unsanitary conditions of production. As now made, it meets certain demands for a substitute for butter, lacking, however, its delicious taste. Its chief usefulness consists in the fact that under the present conditions of production, it can be made and sold much more cheaply than butter. These facts leave us, as official defenders of the public health, no ground for condemning oleomargarine.

The dairy interests make the plea that it is wise public policy to restrain the development of the oleomargarine industry because of the importance of the dairy industry to farm fertility, and of farm fertility to the national welfare; and also, that the destruction of the dairy industry is the cutting off of the very limb upon which the oleo industry is sitting; that is, if we discourage the cow, we'll have no beef and consequently no oleo oil. These pleas deserve the careful thought of the public economist, but it is doubtful whether the food executive can give heed to such pleas without the sacrifice of the impartiality he must observe between all legitimate food trade interests.

What concerns us most is the second fact, that oleomargarine, as it is made today, is not merely a substitute for butter, but an imitation of this dairy product. That it may serve as a substitute for butter, it must have a similar fatty character. There is no good reason why its flavor, obtained almost entirely from the ripened milk from which it is churned, should not carry some of the agreeable qualities of genuine butter. The oleomargarine maker carries the imitation, however, still farther, and, rarely by addition of dyes—because this involves him in the payment of a considerable tax—most often by the selection of fatty ingredients naturally of high yellow or orange color, secures in his product a tint like that of butter. The result is, that even the expert is often deceived into believing from its appearance that the oleo of to-day is butter, until scientific tests disclose its true nature. This close imitation, in point of color, does not materially increase the food efficiency of the oleo. It appeals to the present taste, but it plays also upon our common ignorance. Herein lies its danger.

Our food laws prohibit imitation foods as adulterated, but only when they are sold under the name of the food they imitate, or under such name or device as may lead the consumer to believe he is buying the genuine article instead of its imitation. Where wholesome imitation foods are sold without deception, there is no good reason for limiting the degree of the imitation. The spirit of our laws and the temper of the people favor no exclusive privilege, other than the use of its established name, for any article of food on the ground solely that it is a simpler or a longer known product.

If we faced only these facts, we should have no difficutly in shaping our course in dealing with the oleomargarine question. Unfortunately we are embarrassed by trade conditions we should not overlook.

When oleo was first introduced, it met, like many other new article, a wide-spread and often ignorant prejudice as to the materials from which it was made, the conditions of its making, and its food value. To a manufacturer confident of the worth of his product, but facing such prejudice, two courses lie open: The first is to make a good product in a good way and to overcome the prejudice by an educational campaign, no unimportant part of which is to show good faith by obedience to the law, because it is the law and in spite of any unfairness it may seem to show. The second is to make the excellence of imitation the chief care in the product, to sell the latter for what it seems to be and reap such immediate profit as the fraud may permit, and when brought to task for the fraud to defend it by the excuses of the prejudice met, the unfairness of the laws defied, and the weak cry, "there are others just as bad as we are; punish them."

Some makers of oleo profess, and possibly with truth, never to have used bad materials. The danger in selling oleo as butter has greatly increased, and this bad practice has certainly diminished. It is fair, however, to ask—and I believe the answer to your individual experience—has the oleo trade shown any disposition to obey the law, whatever it may be, for the reason that it is the law?

If not, then is it wise to relieve the oleo trade of the legal requirement, still general, that in the manufacture of this imitation product the characteristic color of butter be avoided, and thus deprive the consumer of a ready means of distinguishing oleo from butter?

When the oleo trade makes clear by present obedience its readiness to obey the future law, because it is the law, the consumer and the trade rival cannot fairly ask for the continuance of special police regulations made to meet earlier trade abuses.

COMPOSITION OF EVAPORATED MILK.

By Julius Hertvet, Chemist, St. Paul, Minn.

Milk, reduced in volume, or condensed, by the evaporation of a portion of its water, has for a score or more of years past maintained a growing importance as a commercial article of food. Some conception of the value of this commodity may be gained from the fact that in the United States census reports of 1905, there is given an aggregate approximating 700,000,000 pounds of fresh milk received at the condensing factories, and that conservative estimates made by persons well acquainted with the industry indicate an increase during five years following to something like 2,000,000,000 pounds.

The condensed milk industry is fast assuming an important role in the progress of dairying and its allied activities and is today a conspicuous factor in the economic welfare not only of our rural communities, but also of our growing urban populations as well. The increased consumption of evaporated and condensed milks is due not only to climatic and geographic conditions, to such demands as exist in lumber and mining camps, on ocean liners, and in the armies and navies of the world, but our home markets have shown a surprisingly growing demand for this commodity, and there is in this department of activity a hopeful promise of a solution of the difficult and stupendous problem of the milk supply in our largest centres of population. Immense quantities of these products go in barrels and in large cans to confectioners, bakers and ice cream manufacturers, and there is an extensive traffic in many localities carried on directly from the condensories to the consumers. Condensed milk has acquired an important role in the hospital service and in the feeding of infants and young children and invalids, and in its ordinary household uses it has become a valuable dietary article, in dilute form, as a substitute for fresh milk and cream, or along with such beverages as tea and coffee and it is useful as a general adjunct in cooking.

Must Know Ingredients.

It has therefore become exceedingly important that the essential ingredients of condensed and evaporated milks be so adjusted and regulated as to best serve the purposes for which these products are intended. It is quite essential that the consumer know exactly what sort of product is supplied and what results are to be expected after an examination of labels or the directions given by manufacturers. The welfare of the consuming public, conjointly with the interests of the manufacturers, demands a two-fold control of the milk condensing industry, in respect, first, to the maintenance of uniform standards of quality and composition, and second, with reference to exclusion of inferior or unwholesome ingredients, or adulterants. Obviously, these ends are unattainable without a thorough knowledge, scientific, technical and commercial, concerning all stages of manufacture and distribution, beginning, in fact, with the production of the "raw material," the fresh milk received from the farms, and ending with the final conditions as they exist in the delivery or sale of the finished product to the consumer. On the one hand, to protect the consumer from the frauds incident to debasements and adulterations, from misbranding and unfair representations; on the other hand, to protect the producer, the manufacturer, from unfair competition and discrimination, and to enable him to successfully conduct his industry without the temptation to resort to unbecoming or unbusinesslike practices—these are the two-fold purposes of any course of procedure in food control in reference to evaporated or condensed milks as in reference to any other class of products.

So much for the side of the manufacturers, briefly, perhaps inadequately stated, but stated in an effort to arrive at a fair basis on which may be discussed the subject of this paper. We are not here concerned so much with the question of adulteration—that matter can be considered as incidental to the larger question regarding the composition of a properly prepared, unsweetened, evaporated milk. The interest of the consumer is essentially the same as the interest of the manufacturer—that the product be a pure, fresh milk, condensed to a proper consistency, palatable and wholesome; in fact, that the article be what it is purported to be, nothing else than pure milk as delivered from the farms and condensed so as to be marketed and used under conditions for which the produce is intended. But, as a check on the manufacturing process, in the interest both of the consumer and the manufacturer, all reasonable considerations demand the establishment of such practical standards of composition as will, on the one hand, be sound and intelligible and, on the other hand, will not impose upon the manufacturer impossible conditions. Clearly, in the nature of the case, such standards must be to a certain extent arbitrary, but arbitrary standards may be valuable aids in efforts at food control and need not involve any features which are either unreasonable or impossible.

Purity.

If an evaporated milk is a product of fresh cow's milk, it should be fairly practicable by chemical analysis to confirm this fact regarding its origin; that is to say, the percentage of certain prominent constituents, say fat and total solids, should be such as would be anticipated under recognized customary variations, in respect both to the composition of pure milk and the customary methods of concentration. It should be possible, for example, to establish a minimum standard for butter fat, which under customary conditions may be attained by condensing a low-test milk, a milk testing, say, 3.25 per cent. of fat, to a marketable condition; such a minimum standard for total solids that will not impose insuperable demands on condensers receiving milk of relatively high fat in solids; or such a standard that will not put in the way of the operator the temptation to add, during the evaporation process, a skimmed or partly skimmed milk, in order to compensate for solids which may happen to be below in proportion to fat.

The 28 per cent. minimum standard for total solids established some years ago by the committee on food standards of the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists, has for some time been regarded as manifestly unattainable under all normal conditions. The ratio standard which specified that the fat be not less than 27.5 per cent. of the total solids, was derived from the standard for whole milk, which required a minimum of 3.25 per cent. for butter fat and 8.5 per cent. for non-fatty solids. Fundamentally, we deplore the tendency in recent years toward the lowering of standards for whole milk. The Holstein argument has, we suspect, gained an undue prestige and has been advanced by the advocates of low standards to an undue advantage. But, be that as it may, we are not here concerned primarily with arguments for or against the lowering of standards for marketable milk. A different aspect of the case arises in considering standards for evaporated milk. The question resolves itself not so much into what may be the lowest tests in individual cows of this or that particular breed, as what, in point of fact, every manufacturer knows to be the range of tests for milk delivered from entire herds. Statements from a number of reliable sources are confirmatory as to the general fact that a mixed supply from herds, year in and year out, will show tests averaging in the neighborhood of from 4 to 4.5 per cent. of butter fat.

Proper Standard.

There is no serious controversy regarding the minimum standard for a sweetened condensed milk; the fixing of a suitable standard for this product has not been hampered by the prevailing low standards for whole milk. An 8 per cent. fat standard is not considered unreasonable, and conforms with well-established ideas and usages among manufacturers. In reference to unsweetened evaporated milk also, it might be comparatively a simple matter to reach an agreement satisfactory to all, consumers and producers alike, if the whole question involved only the fixing of a minimum standard for fat; but there are reasons which do not favor a single standard for a product such as evaporated milk. From the standpoint of the consumer, this product must be regarded primarily as an article of food such as is expected to be produced by the concentration of whole milk; in other words, a substitute for whole milk when properly diluted with water. Stated in round numbers, it would be manifestly unfair, for example, to foist upon the consumer only 16 per cent. of non-fatty solids in a high fat-test milk as against 20 per cent. in a "thin milk," both evaporated to a fat content of 8 per cent.—or total solids respectively, of 24 as against 28 per cent. In the manufacture of an evaporated milk the prime consideration is the concentration of the solid matter—the food material—by reduction of water content; hence, the proper interpretation of value, food value correctly expressed, must be based on the total solids, not in the fat content chiefly.

A single standard, a standard for fat only, would furthermore tend to operate against uniformity in quality of product throughout the year in most localities, encouraging lower total solids in winter than in summer. Objections would arise on the part of the manufacturers also; there would be an injustice to the manufacturer handling a thin grade of milk, compelling the concentration of, say 230 to 240 pounds of fresh milk to produce 100 pounds of finished product, as against only 180 to 190 pounds, which might be all that would be required of the manufacturer operating chiefly with a milk of richer quality. As expressed by a correspondent, "With the appreciation that farmers now have of the value of skimmed milk, very rich milk would soon become the fashion," and the same correspondent writes: "The single fat standard is attractive because of its simplicity and ease of application, but I became convinced from my own independent studies, that it was a snare and a delusion."

The consensus of opinion on the part of all persons interested in the protection of the consumer against inferior products, manufacturers and food law officials alike, appears to demand a specific standard for total solids as well as for fat in evaporated milk. There are arguments favoring a very material lowering of the standard for total solids. These arguments appear to come from two sources mainly—first, from operators who evidently have had a limited experience in the practical and theoretical sides of the condensing industry; second, from certain localities which claim to produce milk testing very high in content of butter fat.

PRESIDENT FOUST'S ADDRESS AT DULUTH.

Members of the Association of State Dairy and Food Executives:

To open this first programmed meeting of our association I have thought a few words about some portions of its work, some of the reasons for its being, would be fitting.

Every part of an engine has its own special work to do, its own peculiar relations to other parts of the machine. For this reason, its shape, strength, place, and connection with the other parts, require the careful study of the master mechanic.

In like way, the food executive has his own duties and responsibilities in the food control organization; duties for performing which he alone has power, responsibilities he can shift to no other shoulders. Consequently, he daily faces problems which he alone can solve, and in the solving of which he must bear the sole responsibility.

So many are these problems that my limit of time will allow the mention of but few, by way of illustration; though, no doubt, each of us could, from recent experience, make out a long list.

Our work requires the organization and keeping in efficient condition of a force of aides each having some special skill in his own department. What kind of men should we select? Where can they be found or what is the best way to train them? What is the best division of labor among them? How is the work of each best controlled or checked to prevent error or to disover misdoing?

We have public funds to expend. What is their best division between the different branches of our service and what the best method of recording our fiscal acts?

We have complex systems of records to keep. What forms are best suited to our work and least costly to keep?

One of our first duties is to discover facts to conceal which keen brains are doing their best. What methods are most useful for the purpose? If information that the usual course of laboratory examination does not give, is to be gotten, what is the best way of getting it in such form that it can be effectively used? Is an interstate exchange of such information feasible?

When violations of the food laws are discovered, the public must be informed for its protection and the guilty must be restrained from further misdeeds. These duties raise problems of publication—its time relative to that of the discovery, its medium, its form, and of legal action and the agents to be used in securing it.

In most states, the responsibility belongs to the food executive, of recommending legislation belonging to our part of the public service, and of advising our respective legislatures about proposed laws on this subject recommended by others. What subjects next require legislative attention? What form should our proposals take? How best can we perform our advisory duties?

The duty of final interpretation of the laws we are sworn to enforce, belongs, of course, to the courts. But such final interpretation is given only upon presentations of cases begun by us. Upon the food executive rests the responsibility for the first interpretation, upon which cases are brought before the courts. What principles should guide us in this primary interpretation of these laws, which are beneficial in purpose, though usually penal in some of their parts? Also, what notice, if any, of these executive interpretations should be given to the public before prosecutions are begun for the corresponding offenses?

The food laws of America show a long step forward in the national standards of trade morality, and are the result of the public attention during a few years to the evils these laws are intended to repress. Does the acceptance of our executive office bring to us any duty of moral leadership? If so, how can we best perform it?

As state officers, we are charged with certain care for intra-state commerce in foods and receive this trust from our respective commonwealths. Yet we are necessarily affected in our work by the related national policing of inter-state food commerce. It would seem, on the one hand, wise policy for us to join the national organization in unifying, so far as practicable, procedure and regulations to relieve legitimate trade interests from confusion and difficulty; and, on the other hand, the duty of each to retain such freedom of individual action as shall enable him to respond promptly to the forward impulses of the commonwealth he is sworn to serve. In what way can these ends best be attained?

Some aspects of these problems are far enough worked out to fit them for public discussions like those of the Association of State and National Food and Dairy Departments; but for others, concerning which ideas are not so commonly accepted or so well studied, executive conference appears the more promising method for our reaching a common agreement or, at least, a common understanding. Some should be discussed by representatives of all branches of our service but others can better be dealt with by executives alone.

If this Association of State Food and Dairy Executives consistently and vigorously cultivate the field I have pointed out, I believe it will prove a valuable adjunct to the Association of State and National Food and Dairy Departments so long as the latter organization may, by harmonious activity, make possible this connection.

THE POLICY OF SUPPLEMENTING THE GENERAL FOOD LAW BY SPECIAL LAWS DEALING WITH SPECIAL COMMODITIES OR CLASSES OF COMMODITIES.

By R. M. Allen, of Kentucky.

From the standpoint of effectiveness, system and certainty in enforcing and observing the food or any other system of legal control, the laws should be made as specific as possible, both with respect to the product or practice covered and the administrative procedure provided for the enforcement. It can be stated, further, that permanent uniformity will not be reached, out of the complex system of federal, state and municipal food and drug control legislation, until a co-operative, non partisan effort is made, on the part of both the officials and the trade concerned, to agree upon more definite provisions for recommendation to Congress and the state legislatures.

When laws regulating some public matter are first enacted, it is not only necessary, but best, that the provisions should be written in broad, general terms, vesting a certain amount of administrative discretion in the officials provided for the enforcement of the law. As intelligent work is conducted under the broad law, however, the need for more specific legislation is constantly seen. These needs, under the general statute, are partially met by conferring upon the administrators of the law the power to adopt regulations. As work proceeds, however, the administrator of the law sees that a part of the trade always waits for executive interpretation, and sometimes, finally, until it is demonstrated as to how much effort and firmness will be put forth in enforcing the law as indicated by the regulation before paying any attention to the law itself. In all instances where property or profits are at stake in complying with the law, there is always a part of the trade who will immediately comply, whatever the inconvenience or the cost, and a majority who will not comply, until the matter has been settled by the courts; and not then, until it has been shown that prosecutions will result in every instance of violation. In such litigation the administrator of the law frequently finds it necessary to expend a large amount of time and appropriation in bringing questions of fact before the court. Take the operation of the general law with respect to milk for example. The effect of feed, breeds and seasons upon the quality of milk has been established by investigators with sufficient definiteness for all practical purposes under the law. Yet, these questions are threshed over time and time again before magistrates and juries, whereas a few lines of definiteness in the law would save much needless time and trouble both to the officials and the milk trade. For, it is the case, time and time again, that the lawyer employed to defend a case will advise that he can win upon some question of fact or law, which, from the standpoint of the law, is no longer a matter of dispute.

The general sanitary provisions of the food laws, construed to refer to sanitation in bakeries, dairies, meat and poultry slaughtering houses, and so on, cannot be effectively carried out without more specific regulation. In order to avoid unnecessary litigation the law should not only provide against the sale of a contaminated product or a product which has been exposed to contamination, but it should take each subject and cover it with such comprehensiveness, intelligence and practicability as would be at once a guide both to the baker and the officials. It must be admitted that it is impossible to do this until the administrative officials have surveyed the conditions, collaborated the non partisan experiences and opinions of the bakers themselves, studied out the practical remedies and made their recommendation to the legislature. When those engaged in the enforcement of the general provisions of law have accomplished this task, however, there is no reason against and every argument in favor of a well constructed, special statute, applying to the bakery problem, the dairy, the poultry killing establishment and egg industry, the slaughtering house, and all other such matters.

There is at present much legitimate opposition to specific provisions of law, from a part of the trade engaged in interstate commerce, and any recommendations towards special laws should take the question of uniformity into consideration. Aside from the controversy over the use of minimum amounts of deleterious or poisonous ingredients in food products—all interests using such substances being, of course, opposed to any state law which would prohibit benzoate of soda or similar antiseptics by name—that part of the trade engaged in the preparation and sale of various food substitutes and compounds are opposed to special labeling clauses; some for the reason that the law may require the label to give too much information to the consuming public, all for the reason that the specific labeling requirements of the different states will not be uniform. This last is a valid objection. During the past history of food control legislation, there has been little effort on the part of the different states to have such specific labeling requirements made uniform, one state with another. In the future it should be possible, however, for that part of the trade which does not care how plain a label is, so long as it is uniform throughout the United States, together with the state and federal food control officials to arrive at a proposed system of uniformity which can be recommended to and which can be passed in Congress and throughout the different states.

The matter of uniformity is one of the particular points in this question of more specific provisions of law with which not only the conferences of state food control officials have to deal, but which it is their duty to consider by reason of their especial experience and knowledge. It is time for systematic effort in this direction. It is time that the experiences and knowledge gained from fifteen to twenty years of state food control work in the United States are being collaborated by the officials and the trade into a more definite and effective system of state and federal legislation.

Many organizations such as the National Civic Federation and so on, are taking up the question of uniformity in food control laws. The trade and the officials know the needs better than any one else, and they should put their experiences and opinions into full touch with any movement throughout the United States touching the food laws. Some of the trade and the federal officials have advised waiting until Congress has acted, and it is a logical conclusion that the first effort towards uniformity should be through action by the National Congress. No move for more definiteness in the laws and effective uniformity will be started, however, until it is started by the food control officials. We have surveyed the conditions, and experience has taught us the legislative remedies necessary to deal with the food and drug control problem. The time has come for recommending the special provisions of law necessary to deal with each of the several problems, with the co-operative effort on all our parts to have uniformity.

CONVENTION NOTES.

The Wilson-Wiley controversy was not mentioned on the floor of the convention. It appeared—only in the newspapers.

The creation of a new section on jurisprudence is proposed in the provisioned draft of the new constitution. The members in sight of this new section are R. M. Allen, of Kentucky and Geo. L. Flanders, of New York. All the rest of the association's membership are wondering as to the possibilities of this section, for which Allen (R. M.) stands sponsor. The question is, can two lawyers ever agree upon any subject?

This convention had an usually big balance-wheel, C. D. Woods of Maine. Commanding in stature, positive in conclusions and in speech, not given to magnifying little differences, not afraid of anything but of being unfair, he was largely instrumental in the closing of the convention without a clash between the groups into which it had unfortunately divided.

The Commercial Club knows how.

The press of Duluth recognized the convention proceedings as good news stuff. The transactions of each day were printed practically in full by every paper in the city.

Myers and Cannon seemed to take the result of the election very hard. Why?

Jones and Wallis are good losers.

R. M. Allen of Kentucky did no gum-shoeing at the Duluth convention. His heels were heard.

Had Director Scovell been at New Orleans things might have been different.

Dr. Crumbine's report of co-operation was a strong piece of constructive work. It opens up a practical way to mutual helpfulness that is much desired.

While Commissioner Jones' candidate for the presidency was defeated by lack of votes, he certainly got a good start in the ringing speech of the Commissioner from Illinois.

J. H. Wallis, Food Commissioner of Idaho, made many friends by his geniality and his ready and efficient committee service.

Editor Myers of the American Food Journal has arranged for a new series of cartoons to show just how it happened.

Cannon thinks the Denver whips have too long been kept in their chamois skins, and that their services are now much needed.

Cannon insists that his relation to the Duluth convention was as justifiable as that of ex-Commissioner Dunlap, of Oiho.

Duluth, we still maintain, is an ideal convention city.

Commissioner Emery still rouses to vigorous speech when the word 'uniformity' is uttered.

The luscious watermelon has long been known as a source of delight to young and old, an indirect cause of profit to the dispenser of Jamaica ginger, and a temptation to many a lad to break the eighth commandment; but it has just turned up in a new role as a puzzle for the section on jurisprudence, to whose first session it is proposed to refer the question 'Is a watermelon shipped with others in bulk an "original package?"' President Flanders will consult his authorities, but R. M. Allen declares that the facts of the case show that the melons in question were crushed and that therefore they must be considered to have been 'broken,' not 'original' packages.

Commissioner Barnard knew very well what ticket he would support, but the individuality of its candidates did not seem to cling to his memory.

In Commissioner Brown the association has a president able to preside over its deliberations with dignity and with fairness to all.

The experiences of Denver, New Orleans and Duluth make it opportune to ask, cannot the level-headed men of the association prevent the divisions, caucussing and slate-making that have so strongly marked these conventions? Cannot the issues leading to these conditions, issues really not essential to the work of the association, be prevented from obtruding into every item of business? Would it not have been practicable to get a list of officers representing the good men of all localities and all shades of opinions, if the delegates had not so tied themselves by participation in caucuses that they could not, without imputation of dishonor, act for the welfare of the association as a whole rather than solely in the interest of a part? There are so many good, strong men in both opposing groups that, if premature committal be avoided at the Seattle meeting, a much improved working condition ought to be reached.

J. Q. Emery of Wisconsin is a man with ideas of his own. He expresses them with fiery oratory as an accompaniment at every opportunity. As a result he has earned the sobriquet "The Human Mince Pie," the man who first applied the name to him explaining that like the pie, he did not agree with anybody.

The question of "What is Bread" still troubles the chemists. At the last night's session Julius Hertvet of Minnesota, was called upon for a definition, and he said the best he had been able to do was to differentiate between a loaf of bread and a doughnut and even there he thought the hole was the principal distinction.

George B. Taylor, of Louisiana, is the youngest appearing pure food expert on the floor. Taylor usually has something to say in his mild Southern drawl that starts a real live discussion however. Taylor is the man who bought the Duluth can of condensed milk that started things at Tuesday's session.

Joel J. Winkjer, Minnesota's Commissioner, was the biggest man in the convention. He stood six feet six in his stockings and used all of it to preserve a very impressive dignity. Mr. Winkjer amused himself during the duller moments of the convention by caricaturing the various speakers, and he has an unusual skill in this line.

J. H. Wallis from Idaho, is one of the men whom President Roosevelt commended for raising a real patriotic American family. He has fifteen children.

L. Davies from Washington did not mix in the Wilson-Wiley controversy very heavily as he was busy putting all his political skill into pulling for Seattle for the next meeting place of the convention.

RESOLUTIONS PASSED BY THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF PHARMACOLOGISTS, D. N. ROBIN, PRESIDENT, PITTSBURGH, PA.

Whereas, The Pure Food and Drug laws of the various states of the Union, as well, the Federal Pure Food and Drug Law, directly from which many of the state laws have been framed; contain specific provision on the misbranding and labeling of drugs, proprietary and patent medicines, toilet articles, cosmetics, food stuffs, and products, etc., and

Whereas, These laws were passed for public health and protection, elevation and betterment of the profession and trade; and

Whereas, The retail drug trade and the pharmaceutical profession of the United States have been greatly aggrieved by the imposition of the marketing of such preparations, prosecutions, and violations of these and other portions of the pure food laws; and

Whereas, The selling and marketing of this class of preparations is an act of fraud and imposition, as well, the obtainance of money under false pretences;

Now therefore, Be it resolved by the National Executive Board of the National Association Pharmacologists in regular session this 29th day of August, 1911, in Columbus, Ohio, that the members of N. A. P. and the drug clerks of the United States assist in every way for the compliance of the provisions of these laws, particularly so as regards to the purity of drugs and the misbranding and labeling of proprietary, patent and non-secret remedies.

Be it further resolved, That co-operation and assistance along the same lines be taken up with the various State Pharmaceutical Association throughout the United States and that the officers and members of said State Association take the publication of the resolutions in our official journal N. A. R. D. Notes and the official notice for action thereon in conjunction with the work and efforts of N. A. P.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

MR. JAMES FOUST,
Harrisburg, Pa.

Dear Sir: In connection with the investigation of the candy samples which were collected by your agents, Banzhoff, Cassidy and Linton, some time ago and turned over to me, I would say that while I am not at the present time prepared to give you a complete report I can give you some preliminary notes of my findings.

Of the 253 samples collected this summer, tests have been made upon all of them for the presence of sulphur dioxide, talc, terra alba, salicylic and benzoic acids, saccharin and other adulterants which would warrant the recommending of prosecutions for violation of the food law.

I am pleased to say that there are but four samples or less than 2 per cent. of the total number which contain any of these adulterants. Three of these four samples contain talc as a coating and the fourth contains sulphur dioxide in appreciable amounts.

This is a very great improvement over conditions as found by me in previous investigations of samples collected by Agent Cassidy, in which nearly 50 per cent. of the samples collected were found to contain some prohibited substance.

I am also pleased to note in the samples collected this year that a larger proportion than ever of them are put up as individual pieces in waxed paper or are put in retailing packages, thus ensuring their cleanliness and sanitary condition when they reach the consumer. I believe that the objectionable and unsanitary condition of many of the samples is due to careless handling on the part of the retailer and that the manufacturer and wholesaler from much blame in this connection.

I have not yet completed my investigation as to how far the substitution of other fats for chocolate fat is practiced nor as to the use of prohibited colors but I believe that in both of the particulars the total number of offences will be found to be small and that the blame for the former at least will be found to be with the retailer who sells for pure chocolate an article which is not sold or billed to him as such.

The foregoing condition will no doubt be as satisfying to you as it is to me to report it and shows the effectiveness of our present legislation in safeguarding the interests of the consuming public.

Very Truly Yours,
CHARLES H. LA WALL.

RELATING TO BREAKFAST FOOD.

Harrisburg, Pa.—Announcement made a few days ago from the State Food Bureau concerning cereal food preparations having called forth many inquiries, Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust thinks it is timely to make a frank statement of the evils discovered by the Bureau in connection with this particular trade and to warn dealers of the measures that will be taken to stop the existing abuses.

There is no criticism, the Commissioner remarks, of the food quality of the average breakfast cereal when it is sold in a fresh condition to the consumer, but it is well known to all dealers that these preparations are very liable to insect attack unless the greatest care be taken to keep the stock fresh and to store in places where the danger of such attack is least. Past examinations by the Bureau have revealed numerous cases in which the contents of packages were simply alive with vermin and cob-webbed with the tissues woven by the insect larvae they contained.

The Commissioner recognizes the conditions confronting the retailer in keeping his stock of breakfast foods fresh; and wholesalers who make a careful comparison of the 100 to 150 brands of such foods on sale in the State will find that in reality there are only 12 to 15 types of breakfast foods that differ at all distinctly one from the other, and yet nearly every week sees community after community canvassed by agents presenting samples of some new breakfast food, taking orders for the same and turning them over to the local grocers supplying these several families, with the demand that he add this new name to his stock, despite the fact that his shelves are already crowded with the one hundred other brands. And immediately thereafter the same merchants are induced to stock largely with this new named variety by reason of quantity discounts. The demand for the goods earlier in stock temporarily, or permanently, stops, but the goods remain on the shelves and are held there for months, or even for years, with the vain hope that the breakfast food fashions may turn and the old stock become salable. Under this condition of affairs "every bug has his day."

The difficulties of the retailer under these conditions are recognized, but the rights of the consumer for protection against this evil cannot be overlooked. The Commissioner wants every retailer handling cereal goods to understand that the retail stocks in every part of the State are to be thoroughly sampled and sent to State College for a scientific examination and that whenever contamination by bugs, slugs and the like is detected prosecutions will be instituted in every case and vigorously pressed. This frank note of warning is given so that the retailer may have a fair opportunity to clean up his stock and consign to the dump every package of cereal that is in condition to bring him into trouble because of its lack of freshness or its location near wevilly goods, since even fresh goods may quickly become wevilly if stored in the neighborhood of old packages containing these insects. Despite the difficulties of these conditions the retailers have a remedy in their own hands, and that is to buy in small quantities, turn the stock often and so have little left long enough upon their shelves to be in serious danger of insect attack. If the retailers, aided by judicious co-operation of manufacturers and jobbers to remedy existing conditions, do not get rid of this evil it is possible that the people may feel it necessary to adopt a remedy proposed in other states against the sale of stale stocks of perishable goods such as these cereal preparations, namely, that of requiring that the package shall bear a stamp indicating the date of manufacture of the goods.

The Commissioner earnestly hopes that the retailers of the State will examine their own stocks and protect their own customers before the Food Agents reach their stores, and by so doing avoid trouble of a more serious character for themselves.

SHOULD MATERIALS HAVING NO FOOD VALUE BE ALLOWED IN THE MANUFACTURE OF FOODS?

Paper read by Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust at the meeting of the Domestic Science and Pure Food Congress, at Madison Square Garden, New York City, Tuesday evening, September 26, 1911.

My subject has, at many points, been so frequently discussed, that I do not hope to present many details that would be novel, to this audience. It is important, however, in shaping the course of a broad movement like the Pure Food movement, to keep steadily in view certain main principles. It is my hope that this discussion may aid in this.

The general food laws have been framed mainly to suppress three evils; the sale of goods under false names, the sale of weakened, deteriorated, decomposed, diseased and contaminated food materials, and the sale of foods adulterated by the addition of impure, inert, or injurious substances.

The addition of such substances has increased in volume with the transfer of food manufacture from the small shop to the large factory and with the growth of chemical knowledge.

The object of the additions has, in practically every case, been the convenience and profit of the manufacturer and the dealer, not the advantage of the ultimate consumer, even though by the laws of competition the latter has sometimes obtained the adulterated article for a lower price than he would have paid for staple goods.

To fix this point let me ask: Why has the ketchup maker dyed his product with coal tar dye? Why has the maker of cheap jellies used benzoate of soda? Why has the milk dealer added formaldehyde to his milk and cream? Why has the candy maker coated his wares with shellac and paraffin? Why has the cake baker used yellow dyes and rotten eggs in making what he sells as delicacies? Why has the pop-drink bottler used saccharin instead of sugar to sweeten his beverages? Has it been the welfare of the consumer or the prospect of an unusual gain to himself that led to these abnormal additions?

It is true that the people, by the legislation they have favored directly and through the public press, have given their unmistakable answer to most of these questions and have cried, "Halt," to the manufacturer who has persisted in practices clearly shown to be detrimental to the consumer.

One foundation fact upon which the public policy has been based, must not, however, be overlooked. Our systems of legislation have been shaped chiefly with reference to the rights of property and of individual freedom of action. . The result has been that the paramount right to life and health and the responsibility of the individual for the welfare of others, have often been lost to view.

Is it not time to ask whether the changes in the conditions of production and distribution of our foods, whereby a single factory decides the character of the food of thousands of our citizens, have not made it important to lay the emphasis upon health rather than property, and somewhat more upon the manufacturer's obligation to the public, and less upon his freedom of action, important though property and freedom of action are?

The food manufacturer has until recently been left free to put into his food products any substance, not a violent poison, that he thought advantageous to himself. Let us admit in fairness that he did not suppose the result would be noticeably injurious to the public health. It still remains true that he awaited no thorough proof of the truth of his supposition but unconcernedly experimented on the people, instead of first "trying it on the dog."

Because of the centralization of our food manufactures and of the steady decrease in the home preparation of our foods, the influence of the food manufacturer upon the welfare of the people has become enormous. Is it not time to consider seriously whether our method of dealing with food problems should not be altered even to the extent of putting the burden of proof as to the wholesomeness of any proposed food ingredient upon the manufacturer, rather than upon the people, as at present; and of prohibiting the addition to food of any substance which does not contribute to the value of that food to the consumer?

In the recent magnificent demonstration of support which the entire nation has given to Dr. Harvey W. Wiley in appreciation of his earnest efforts in their behalf, the public has shown its sustained interest in the pure food movement. I trust that this interest may open the way to legislation such as may more completely protect the public in the character of its foods, and, at the same time, leave the way clear for the highest development along beneficial lines of the food manufacturer's art.

POLISHED RICE DANGEROUS.

From Government Agricultural Experiment Station,
Agricultural College, N. D.
Special Bulletin Food Department, August, 1911.

Most of the rice sold in this country at the present time is polished. There has been added to the rice a ground mineral which is made to adhere by the means of a small amount of glucose; the mineral used being ground rock, talcum.

It is maintained that when persons live continuously upon a product of this character it becomes dangerous to health. It is shown that the disease, Beriberi, has some connection with the eating of polished rice, and that this dread disease makes its appearance among those who are consumers of such rice. Experiments made and as reported by the Public Health and Marine Hospital Service indicate that polished rice will have to go.

Dr. Frazier fed chickens on polished rice, and between the sixtieth and seventieth day Beriberi appeared among the chickens. Those fed on polished rice began to die, while those fed on unpolished rice continued to thrive. Other experiments confirm these.

Again, an opportunity occurred wherein 250 laborers, employed in a country where Beriberi had not existed, were fed upon rice, one-half of the men upon polished rice, the other half upon unpolished rice. Beginning with the sixtieth day a case of Beriberi appeared among the laborers who were being fed upon polished rice. It is further stated, in public institutions, when polished rice has been discontinued and unpolished rice substituted, Beriberi has ceased to exist.

It is, therefore, a matter of importance as a health consideration that action be taken to put a stop to the sale of rice polished and coated with a mineral product made dangerous to health, as is indicated in the reports referred to.

The British Food Journal calls attention to the use of polished rice and cites a court case where the dealer was convicted for the sale of the same.

COMMON SENSE ON THE MICROBE QUESTION.

Editorial in Philadelphia Inquirer.

A good many people will have read the remarks lately made on the microbe question by Dr. Alvah H. Doty, health officer of the Port of New York, with a sense of lively satisfaction and some feeling of relief. Their tenor was that the maleficent influence and activity of the omnipresent microbe as an agent for the destruction of health and life had been absurdly exaggerated and that if people would think less and worry less upon this subject it would be a great deal better for them.

Dr. Doty expressed the opinion, and it is an opinion in which many will agree with him, that a large part of the agitation over microbes which has gone on within the past few years is to the last degree irrational and absurd. People have gone microbe crazy. They have read without clearly understanding the medical dissertations about the extent to which diseases of all kinds are occasioned by these microscopical organisms which get into our systems and become perniciously active there, and many of them live under a constant apprehension lest their own systems be invaded by these invisible enemies at some time when they are momentarily off their guard.

And the trouble is that it is so difficult, that it is virtually impossible, to maintain a sufficiently vigilant and effective outlook for these innumerable and omnipresent invaders of the human frame. There are microbes everywhere. Nothing that we touch, taste, or handle is immune from their presence, so we are told, and there is never any telling how soon or at what moment any one of us may fall a victim to their destructive operations.

That is the prevalent idea for which the little knowledge declared by Alexander Pope to be a dangerous thing must be held responsible, and it is the gratifying feature of Dr. Doty's deliverance that it tends to dissipate what has become a sort of national obsession. He says that there is a whole lot of humbug about this microbe business, and that the people who lie awake nights shivering lest a microbe should catch them are very foolish. How often have we been told that there was danger in handling a dirty bank note because so many billions of deleterious germs are likely to be distributed over its surface. Probably not many have been deterred by this warning from handling all the bank notes that came their way, and yet it is satisfactory to be assured that they may be handled, microbes and all, without the slightest risk.

It is the same with other things which have in a like manner been placed under the ban. The chances are that they are quite innocuous and that the danger which they are supposed to present is wholly imaginary, and it may be set down as a principle of universal application that to be so solicitous about keeping one's health, to be so anxiously apprehensive of the causes which threaten it, is a serious mistake. This is one of the respects in which Christian Science has been beneficial and one of the secrets of the amazing success which has attended its propaganda. Those who have accepted and are faithful to its doctrines are not constantly thinking about their bodily conditions and fearing that they may fall sick. They have full faith that their good health will continue, and instead of worrying about eventualities entirely beyond their power to control they take its continuance as a matter of course.

Our forefathers, knowing nothing about microbes, took no precautions against them, yet they enjoyed as good health as we do and lived as long. Let us set aside hysteria and be guided by the promptings of plain, ordinary common sense.

A USEFUL NATIONAL ASSOCIATION.

The Association of National and State Dairy and Food Departments was organized eighteen years ago by a handful of executive officers having to do with the food laws of their respective states. It was thought by the gentlemen who suggested the wisdom of forming the association and who promoted the first meeting that much good might eventually be accomplished by a union of effort. It was felt that if the food officials of the states kept each to his own sphere and if no effort was made to bring about a common bond of sympathy and friendship that might eventually lead to very valuable interchange of views, the servants of the people would be neglecting an opportunity to make themselves increasingly useful.

And so the first meeting was held by a few men who were charged with the enforcement of the food laws of their several states and who were sincerely anxious to perform their duty in the most effective manner. One of the first projects that came to the front was the great desirability of uniformity in state laws. The idea was to secure the preparation of a series of acts that would resemble each other in all material respects and give the people of all the states pure food. There would be, naturally, a liberal interchange of views concerning the manner and method of most effectively enforcing such laws. While the uniformity hoped for has not yet been obtained, the country is approaching nearer that ideal every day and the situation is very much better than it was when the association began its work. Changing times and new problems that require discussion and solution have kept the members of the association in sympathy with each other and the annual meetings are now largely attended, the association having grown strong and influential.

The membership of this national organization has been enlarged during the passage of the years so that it now contains representatives of the nation as well as of the several states. There are food commissioners, state analysts, government representatives as well as attorneys in charge of trials of food cases where the laws have been violated and the guilty parties have been taken into court. The annual meetings are not only interesting but also really important so that much benefit has resulted. Of course in a convention made up as this one is of many gentlemen from various sections of the country, each with his own opinions and his own experiences, there must inevitably be differences of opinion concerning the interesting topics now attracting public attention. And thus it has happened that some mistakes may have been made and some unwise policies supported for the moment. Yet if the proceedings of the association be taken as a whole it will be perceived that they have been in the general direction of progress and that they have wrought for good.

But the association is evidently but upon the threshold of its career. If its officers and members strive to carry out the purpose of its founders it cannot fail to be a power for good. The keynote of the proceedings at its annual meeting should be, substantial service to the consumer and fairness toward the honest manufacturer and vender. It should be the aim of the association to take a clear and determined stand upon the absorbing subject of food adulterants. It should maintain an unmistakable position, standing firmly against the intrusion into food stuffs of all ingredients that have no food value. Not only should all doubtful chemical preservatives be eliminated but also every foreign substance that does not contribute to the sustenance of the body and that has been introduced solely for the purpose of cheapening the product. If the association continues to pursue such a course as has been outlined here it will grow in power and influence and the American people will rally to its support and give it the same implicit confidence that they repose in Dr. Wiley who has stood for these ideas for many years.

Recent occurrences which need not be more particularly outlined here have demonstrated quite clearly that the people of this country are not looking with friendly eyes upon adulterated articles of food. Nor have they any high regard for the manufacturers and others who have been making such strenuous efforts to defeat the intentions of the federal food and drugs act. We should all get on the popular side, not because it is expedient but because it is right.

PERHAPS A SUFFICIENT REASON.

It is not best to permit stock to remain too long on the shelves of a grocery store. It sometimes happens that the retailer over-estimates the probable demand for a certain brand of goods and over-orders, or permits the representative of the wholesaler or the manufacturer to persuade him to take more than his trade will fairly stand. Thus if he orders a certain lot of goods in the spring some may be still on the shelves when the snow begins to fall or even the following spring. There is always danger of deterioration. Besides, stale goods never recommends any dealer to the continued patronage of the careful and experienced housewife. It is worth while to consider her prejudices and prepossession, even if some goods be lost.

Perhaps the notion of frequently changing the contents of the grocer's shelves may have had somewhat to do with Commissioner Foust's instruction to the agents of the Dairy and Food Division to look up the breakfast foods throughout the State with a view to confiscating those containing bugs and worms. The fresh products are not inhabited. They are, as a rule carefully prepared amid excellent sanitary surroundings. But when an article of this sort stands on the shelves for months there is a very great possibility that various malevolent germs, microbes or bacilli—take your choice—may get into the boxes and invade the contents. In fact the thing has happened again and again, as many investigators know.

If grocers here and there forget to examine the breakfast foods that were ordered for spring and summer use and still remain on the shelves it will be the duty of agents of the Bureau to do this necessary work in their stead. The result will be beneficial to both dealers and consumers. It will remind the former that it is very unwise to sell stale goods to patrons who have dealt with them for years and who for that very reason are liable to take offense if they discover that their purchase contains animal or insect life as well as vegetable. No housewife feels good when she finds that her purchases, instead of being nice and fresh are polluted by bugs and worms. She is just as liable as not to transfer her patronage to some other dealer. Fresh groceries have a charm for the buyer that is absent from the stale article.

We had written that far when a friend of the retail trade declared that the grocer was the victim of vicious circumstances so far as breakfast foods are concerned. "Do you know how he happens to have old and suspicious breakfast foods in stock sometimes? There are about 125 different brands of these products on the market. There are about fifteen that do really differ in a substantial way. The other 110 are merely variants of the fifteen."

Where there are so many brands the competition among manufacturers is necessarily keen. Among other methods taken to increase their sales the manufacturers employ canvassers who go out into a community taking orders. As a result the grocer is suddenly confronted by the statement that a dozen or more of his regular patrons have signified their intention of patronizing Blank's Breakfast Food hereafter. They have given this agent an initial order and the goods are to be delivered through this grocer. What can he do? He cannot afford to snub his customers. He is induced to give a regular order. Some of the stuff goes readily enough but presently the demand slackens and the grocer finds himself with a left-over stock on his hands. And this same experience may come to him in connection with several different brands.

Now, the Bulletin is no trust advocate but it does think the manufacturers and wholesalers ought to protect their patrons the grocers. Some method ought to be discovered for reducing the number and variety of breakfast foods offered the retailers of the country and through them to the consumer. They might well be limited to the primitive fifteen. Perhaps then the retailer would be able to clear his shelves of dead stock more frequently. At all events it is the firm determination of Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust to rid this State of breakfast foods that are infected with bugs and worms. The consumer does not relish that sort of a mixed vegetable and animal diet. He is entitled to protection and it will be given him. The buggy and wormy breakfast food must vanish from the markets of Pennsylvania.

AN EXCELLENT BODY OF LAWS.

Every law now on the statute books of Pennsylvania relating to food and drink had a reason for its existence, a good reason. Our laws were not all enacted at one time. Like every other living and useful thing, they are a growth. From a comparatively insignificant and immature beginning they have developed until they have approached perfection. In their several departments they leave little to be desired, but it is quite likely some needed additions will be made by future legislatures.

These laws were enacted for the express purpose of protecting the people of Pennsylvania against the manufacturers and venders of adulterated food and drink. The acts now in force cover all manner of food products but they refer only to non-alcoholic beverages. Each in its special field seeks to do justice to both manufacturer and consumer and special efforts are made to protect the retail vender from punishment for the offenses of the manufacturer. They are so arranged that no retail dealer who observes their requirements or takes advantage of their cautions need ever feel the sting of the offended law.

As the laws regulating the manufacture and sale of food products and non-alcoholic drinks are required to be enforced, and as it is the duty of the Dairy and Food Commissioner to enforce them, that officer is particularly anxious that all concerned should know and obey the laws. That is one reason this Bulletin has devoted so much space during the past four years to a sincere effort to acquaint the manufacturers and dealers with the requirements of law. That is one reason why so determined an effort has been made to impress the minds of dealers with the importance of familiarizing themselves with law and adhering thereto.

Some folks think that too much emphasis is laid upon the food problem these days. They hold that the former times were better than these, but in this they err, either through ignorance or from selfish motives. The food laws have helped to lengthen the lives of the present generation. They have greatly reduced infant mortality and have done good in many other ways. They will be rigidly but prudently enforced.

NOT AN INTERPRETER OF LAWS.

Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust is frequently in receipt of letters in which he is asked for his understanding of various sections of the food laws of the Commonwealth. He is obliged to disappoint his interrogators for the reason that it is his business to enforce the laws as they stand on the statute books, not to interpret them.

Each county in the State is now provided with a competent court, clothed with the power of interpretation. Besides these local courts that exist for the convenience of those living within their jurisdiction, the State has a Superior Court and a Supreme Court, the interpretation of the latter being conclusive and final in every instance. These courts were established not only for the purpose of protecting the lives and property of citizens but likewise to pass upon the several statutes and interpret them.

The Dairy and Food Commissioner exists for an entirely different purpose. He is the executive officer of his Bureau. With the assistance of the agents of the Bureau he undertakes to carry into effect the exact provisions of the body of laws relating to the manufacture, distribution and sale of food products throughout the Commonwealth. Each of the laws specifically lays upon his shoulders the duty of enforcing it. And he is not authorized to make changes or modifications in law; to enforce certain sections and ignore others. He must take the law as it reads and go forward, leaving the courts to settle differences of opinion that may spring up.

Under the circumstances persons who wish to know precisely what a certain section of a food law means must go to their attorney or to the courts for information of an authoritative character. No other authority exists in this Commonwealth. As for the Dairy and Food Commissioner, he has his hands quite full enough when he attends to the daily discharge of the duties clearly imposed upon him by the various acts of Assembly pertaining to his office and its administration now on the statute books. He has no authority to act as an interpreter and he is very well satisfied that he hasn't.

THE PROPER THING IN ANALYSIS.

There is a difference of policy among the pure food officials of the several states which is very radical. In some states the entire time of the head of the bureau is devoted to the work of analysis. In others the chief efforts of the commissioner are devoted to the practical enforcement of the laws. In other states the work of analysis is blended with the enforcement of the penalties of law upon all manufacturers or venders whose products are found to be wanting in any essential particular.

While the work of analyzing food products is wisely regarded as a work of undoubted value to the community, there are some consumers who feel that analysis alone is a very expensive and a somewhat useless procedure. What particular benefit is it to the people of any state to be supplied with many volumes of learned disquisitions concerning the properties of any article when the indiscriminate sale of articles injurious as well as healthful is permitted to go on without discrimination? State officials might carry on their office work until the crack o' doom and if they never did anything more they would work no improvement for the better in the food situation in their states. The people might, indeed, have a very considerable amount of scientific and technical knowledge at their command, but if they didn't understand it and if its promulgation did not prevent the manufacture and sale of adulterated food of what real value would it be? What substantial thing would there be to show for the money expended?

The other theory is that analysis should be the servant of the law; that it should be followed by practical work. If specimens of food products that have been subjected to chemical analysis are shown to contain adulterants or ingredients other than those mentioned on the label the manufacturers or venders of such products should be dealth with immediately under the law. The latter should be cautioned and if he persists the penalties of the law should be imposed. Analysis for results is a proper programme. It is a necessary preliminary to the enforcement of law upon detected criminals. When so used it is not expensive and it is properly employed by the state authorities.

THE BATTLE AGAINST CHEMICAL PRESERVATIVES.

One of the most encouraging signs of the times is the existence in the United States of an association of food manufacturers having for its chief purpose the preparation and sale of absolutely pure food, as well as the formulation of plans and policies for the dissemination of the truth about foods and the cultivation of a proper sentiment among the people.

The members of this association use no chemical preservatives in the goods they recommend to the public. They hold with Dr. Wiley and many other capable officials and scientists that such preservatives are harmful to the human system as well as helpful to the purposes of those who desire to palm off upon consumers and retailers an inferior brand of goods, tempting both by the bait of "cheap" products. They declare that the plea that chemical preservatives are essential to the proper preservation of certain goods is not true. They say the old fashioned and harmless preservatives used by our grandmothers have not lost their potency.

Now, whenever there is a controversy raging between rival food manufacturers, the one side lining up in favor of chemical dope, the other against it, the proper course for the housewife to pursue is to side with the foes of the dope. If it be harmless not everybody is clearly convinced of that fact. If it be injurious those who abstain from the use of food products in the preparation of which it was employed are on safe ground. Abstinence is the wise policy in any event, for we all know that the food that contains no doubtful substances by way of preserving it is much safer than any other sort. In short the conduct of the housewife in the selection of food for the use of her family cannot be too guarded. Improper or poisonous ingredients have done much harm in times past and they have not lost their potency in that direction.

We are convinced that public sentiment is becoming so emphatic concerning this matter of pure foods that the time is at hand when those who have been fighting the battles of the chemical preservatives for several years will finally give over the struggle and settle down to a more or less contented acceptance of the situation as the people have determined it must be. And the label-reading housewife can hasten the day.

DISINFECTANTS.

(Taken from "Dairy Bacteriology" by Drs. Russell and Hastings.)

Carbolic acid and cresol compounds. These substances are among the cheapest and best disinfectants, but their use in the dairy is not advisable on account of their penetrating and lasting odor. They can be used to advantage on the farm. Some of the proprietary compounds, as zenoleum, kresol, etc., are easily applied, since they mix readily with water in all proportions, forming a milky white emulsion that can be easily applied. They are less caustic and less poisonous than carbolic acid.

Corrosive Sublimate. Corrosive sublimate is the most efficient disinfectant under ordinary conditions. It is such an intense poison that it must be used with caution in places to which stock has access, or in the dairy. A soluton of one part of the salt to a thousand parts of water (half ounce to four gallons of water) is the standard generally used.

For gutters, drains and waste pipes in factories, ferrous sulphate (green vitriol) and copper sulphate (blue vitriol) can be used to advantage. They are classed as deodorants rather than as true disinfectants. Since they have no odor of their own they can be used in any amount in the dairy.

Sulphur can be used to advantage in the destruction of mold spores in cheese rooms, but the effect of the vapors of burning sulphur on germ life is relatively light unless there is an abundant supply of moisture in the air of the enclosed space, in which case sulphurous acid is formed which has a much greater effect. To have the desired effect, sulphur should be burned at the rate of three pounds to each one thousand cubic feet of space and the room kept sealed for at least twelve hours. If sulphur is placed in an iron kettle which is set in a vessel of water, danger from fire will be avoided, and the heat generated by the burning sulphur will evaporate sufficient water to increase the effect of the fumes.

Formalin. Another disinfectant that may be used as a liquid or as a gas is formalin, which is a watery solution of the gas formaldehyde. It is much more powerful in its action than sulphur and has a great advantage over corrosive sublimate and other strong disinfectants in that it is not so poisonous to animals as it is to bacteria and fungi.

It can be used as a solution (one to five per cent.) for the washing of woodwork or for the treatment of any object, since it has no corrosive action. It can also be employed as a gaseous disinfectant for the treatment of rooms. It is most conveniently applied by suspending large cloths in the room and spraying them with the solutions, then closing the room for a number of hours.

Bleaching Powder. Chloride of lime, or bleaching powder as it is often called, is a good disinfectant as well as a deodorant. It is used as a wash in the proportion of four to six ounces to a gallon of water. It must be used with care in factories since the free chlorine that is given off has a penetrating odor.

CONCERNING MICROBES.

Elsewhere appears an article from the Philadelphia Inquirer entitled "Common Sense on the Microbe Question." It is based upon some recent remarks by Dr. Alvin H. Doty, health officer of the port of New York, and is reprinted here because it is a well-written discussion of the microbe problem from a somewhat unusual standpoint. It is readable and interesting and contains a considerable quantity of truth. On the other hand it is one-sided and superficial.

Discoveries in medicine and surgery during the last quarter of a century have revolutionized both opinion and practice. It is not quite true that our ancestors lived as long as we do and were as healthy, generally speakng. When men now old were boys they were told that the average life of a generation was thirty-three years. We are now assured that it is at least forty years. There has been an extension of seven years in the average longevity of the race. There is more chance for the infant now than there was a quarter of a century ago.

We are willing to agree with the Inquirer that the microbe business has been overworked during recent years. At the same time most of the advantages that have come to men and women during the last few years, so far as the prevention or cure of disease is concerned, have come as the result of investigations and discoveries in the wonderful world of microbes. We have been able to limit the ravages of such diseases as small-pox, yellow fever, typhoid fever, Asiatic cholera, because of the discoveries of recent years. The other day cholera appeared at our gates. Nobody was specially alarmed and the disease was halted. A few years ago the exertions of the medical department of the army stamped out yellow fever in Cuba, for centuries a veritable charnel house and to-day the Isthmus of Panama is one of the healthiest spots on the planet, whereas while the French were trying to dig the Panama canal, now approaching completion under American control, men died like flies. No, it will not do to poke fun at the investigations of those who have hunted the microbe to his lair. They have been genuine benefactors of the race.

SOME PERILS ATTENDING CATTLE AUCTIONS.

R. B. Swift, a prominent Jersey breeder in Illinois, contributes a long article to a recent number of Hoard's Dairyman, in which he severely criticizes the methods of many of the promoters of auctions of pure bred cattle. He admits that the auction properly conducted is a considerable advantage to the small farmer, but claims that some villainous methods have been introduced which need correction. He describes many of the practices resorted to to increase prices or get rid of cattle and this part of his article is certainly entitled to the attention of those who patronize auctions of cattle. While it is not contended that these practices are in universal use, he contends that they are too common, and it is well to be on guard against them.

But Mr. Swift also claims that of the many ways of spreading disease the auction is one of the very worst. While the sales catalogues usually provide that cattle will be tested for tuberculosis by any buyer, this proposition is scarcely ever accepted, for one reason or another. The buyer has left home with a lot of work undone, and various things are needing attention. After the sale he undertakes to get a qualified veterinarian, only to find that one is away from home, another has no tuberculin, and the only remaining one cannot come for a couple of days. The cattle looking healthy and other buyers shipping; with assurance that no tuberculosis has ever been on that farm, the buyer finally decides to ship without testing, only to find later that this dread disease has somehow gotten into his herd. Mr. Swift adds that this phase of the matter is bad enough but not so bad, not so low-lived and criminal as the sale where cattle are claimed to have been tested and certificates from dishonest veterinarians are furnished which show a series of temperatures that are "faked." He admits that it is a serious matter to charge such criminality, but affirms that there are numerous instances where the cattle sold with faked certificates have been retested within a reasonable time only to be found diseased. Of course the same fraud might be practiced in private sales, but it is not so likely to happen. We give the substance of Mr. Swift's views without endorsing them.

CONCERNING THE STATE'S MILK SUPPLY.

During the months of June, July and August of the current year 6,000 samples of milk, cream and ice cream were purchased by the agents of the Dairy and Food Bureau and duly forwarded to the official chemists for analysis. These samples were obtained from every section of the State. Two hundred and seventy-seven cities and towns furnished them. The samples gathered from 207 towns were found to be below the standard required by the act of June 8, 1911. Those secured in the remaining seventy towns were found to be of excellent quality, fully meeting the requirements of the act.

Some persons have claimed that the requirement of 3¼ per cent. butter fat and 12 per cent. milk solids and 18 per cent. butter fat for cream is unreasonable. They have alleged that it cannot be complied with and that the standard should be lowered. But the figures from the seventy towns in which the standard was measured up to shows that the law's requirement, so far as milk is concerned, is not unfair either to the cow or to her owner. As for the cream standard, that can be regulated by the setting of the separator. The facts are more powerful than any amount of assertion.

It is a notorious fact that the people of Pennsylvania have been buying and paying for a very poor quality of milk during recent years. It is equally well known that much of the milk supplied by dairymen has left their premises in excellent condition. They did not interfere with it, but sent it out to the distributors in exactly the shape it came from the friendly cow. But some of the distributors—a good many of them—have not been so scrupulous. They have been tampering with the milk, to their own profit and to the serious disadvantage of the consumer. The law proposes to make an end of this sort of distribution. The consuming public must be taken care of.

The Dairy and Food Commissioner will undertake to see that this beneficent law is impartially and vigorously enforced. There are reasons in plenty why the people living in this Commonwealth, young and old, healthy or sick, should have no milk supplied them by the distributors except that which is pure and wholesome. Most dealers recognize that fact now.

CARE OF MILK AND CREAM ON THE FARM.

At the Wilson meeting of the Northwestern Wisconsin Buttermakers' Association the following paper on The Care of Milk and Cream on the Farm was read by W. T. Limp:—

In making butter of high quality, the buttermaker must first see that the raw material which he uses is in first class condition. This, however, the producer must see to before he delivers it to the creamery.

He must see that the barn in which the cows are kept is clean and free from bad odors.

The feeding of dry fodder, and the bedding of animals with straw, should not be done until after milking, as this adds greatly to the germ life floating in the air. In time most of these dust particles settle to the floor, but where the herd is kept in the barn, the constant movement of the animals keeps these particles more or less in motion, and so, while milking some of these particles drop into the pail.

The cows should be well bedded so as to keep them as clean as possible, and before milking the loose hair and dust particles on the cow's udder and flanks should be brushed off. The skin should then be thoroughly moistened with clean water and then wiped. The fore, or the first milk in the teats, should not be used as the milk contains many germs, which get into the teat from the cow's lying down or from the air. The farmer does not lose very much by throwing away this milk, as it contains no fat.

The milker should also not be forgotten, as he should not do any milking in dust laden garments, which have been worn all day, as this is a favorable opportunity for contamination. In sanitary dairies milkers are usually clad in white suits. The filthy practice of milking with wet hands is also to be condemned.

Cows should always have clean food to eat and clean pure water to drink. Strong feed, such as rape, turnips and cabbage, should never be fed until after milking. If fed before milking this can be noticed in the milk.

All dairy utensils which come in contact with the milk should be so constructed as to permit of easy cleaning. Tinware, preferably of the pressed variety, gives the best surface for this purpose and is best suited for the handling of milk. Milk vessels should never be permitted to become dry when dirty, for dried particles of milk are extremely difficult to remove. In cleaning dairy vessels they should first be rinsed in luke warm, instead of hot, water so as to remove organic matter without coagulating the milk. Then wash thoroughly in hot water, using a good washing powder. After washing rinse thoroughly in clean, hot water. Not only should the greatest care be paid to the cans and milk pails, but all dippers, strainers, separator and other utensils that come in contact with the milk should be kept equally clean. Cloth strainers, unless attended to, are objectionable, for the fine mesh of the cloth retains so much moisture that it becomes a veritable hot-bed of bacterial life, unless they are daily boiled or steamed.

After milking, the milk should be removed from the barn and strained as soon as possible. If the milk is to be separated, it should be separated at once and the cream cooled as soon as possible. If the milk is not separated it should be cooled at once, and to a temperature of 50 degrees Fahrenheit, if possible. The separator should never be kept in the barn, and never keep cream or milk in the barn or in the cellar, but where the air is pure. If the milk is separated the separator must be cleaned every time it is used. It has been found that the germ content of the milk has been increased from three to five times by running it through a hand separator that had been used, and simply flushed out and left standing for a few hours.

The cans which are used for taking milk to the creamery should be emptied, washed and aired soon after they get back from the creamery. Rusty cans and pails should never be used, as this greatly increases the germ content of the milk.

The milk should be delivered every day in the summer and every other day in the winter; cream three times a week in summer and twice in winter.

The cans must be well covered with clean blankets, or canvas, while being delivered to the creamery, and not with dirty horse blankets. Where gasoline power is used, the exhaust should always be piped out of the separator house as the cream takes this gasoline odor very quickly.

CANNED AND COLD STORAGE EGGS.

In an interview at Buffalo on the subject of canned and cold storage eggs, Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry of the United States Department of Agriculture, said:—

"Canned eggs are healthful—provided they are pure and sweet when they are put in the cans. So are cold storage eggs. The trouble is that too many canned eggs and stored eggs are bad when they are put into cold storage. The principal objection to canned and stored eggs is that they are not all sound when they are put into storage, as I said before, and that the time they are kept in cold storage is generally too extended. A reasonable time beyond which they should not be kept in cold storage is from one laying season to another. Fresh eggs begin to be plentiful by the 1st of February. There ought to be no storage or canned eggs sold after that date. The old eggs ought to be disposed of from the storage warehouses and the markets by that time. But the usage is very contrary and cold storage eggs are still being sold and will continue to be sold, so that it practically amounts to this, that some people never get any fresh eggs at all. They usually get stored eggs the year around. One can never tell by the market names what he is getting. You never read of any stored eggs being advertised for sale. The market reports tell of 'strictly fresh,' 'prime' and 'western' eggs—which is a libel on the West for packed eggs is what is meant. There ought to be municipal, state and national laws against selling storage eggs as fresh, and against the keeping of eggs in cold storage beyond the period of one season to another.

"There are plenty of eggs in February, March and April. Twice as many are produced as are used. The surplus ought to be allowed to be put away in cold storage, but the law should require that they be disposed of and the warehouses be cleaned of them in November, December and January when there are few fresh eggs to be had. The proper and natural use of cold storage, which is to supply in November, December and January the surplus of eggs in February March and April, or March, April and May, is a blessing. But the cold storage which seeks to control prices and which operates so as to compel people to eat stored eggs the year around, it illegitimate and should be prohibited. Every fraudulent use of cold storage should be prohibited. It is fraudulent to sell stored eggs as fresh and that should be prohibited."

Of the effect of extended cold storage on stored food Dr. Wiley said:—

"There are certain chemical changes wrought even under continued low temperature which deteriorate their quality. Fish, for instance, deteriorates much more rapidly than any other stored food. It is depreciated in taste and nourishment. Apples and oranges are improved by low temperature, some think, and many prefer fresh meats that have been 'ripened,' as they call it, in cold storage for two or three weeks, but they should not be kept in cold storage for more than two or three weeks. Beyond that time they deteriorate. On the other hand, cured meats improve by age, like ham and bacon. They require a year or two years to be cured properly, but it is a curious situation that we have found in the work of the Chemical Bureau of the Department of Agriculture, namely, that producers insist on working off cured meats before they are properly cured, and keep fresh meats in cold storage beyond the term when they are palatable and nutritious. They dispose of ham cured under three weeks, and beef from six months to a year in cold storage, instead of the other way 'round, which would be better in every way for everybody."

AN ALL AROUND INSPECTION.

Chief Rawl, of the Dairy Division of the National Department of Agriculture at Washington, read a masterly paper at the Duluth meeting of state and national dairy and food officials. It dealt with Dairy Inspection, was well received and was full of excellent suggestions.

There was one phase of the subject, however, which Chief Rawl failed to discuss, probably because other matters seemed to him more urgent. Yet since that topic concerns the inspection of the milk depots of the middlemen or distributors we are convinced that it is of the utmost importance. And yet it is a matter that is too much overlooked.

For just consider. You may have model dairy barns; every cow in your herd may be registered and quite free from tuberculosis or other diseases; the milking utensils may be thoroughly sterilized every time they are used; the men or women who have the milking in charge may wear white garments and have hands that are free from the suspicion of taint; the udders of the cows may be carefully and thoroughly washed just before the milking is done, so that they will be perfectly clean, and the milk may be delivered to the city or town milk depot as pure and free from contamination as is possible and yet you will need something more if you wish to insure the delivery of that pure milk to the consumer in as fine a condition as it was in when it left the model dairy. You must have complete and thorough inspection of the milk depot from which it is distributed to consumers.

There is room for a mighty improvement here. For in many instances the milk which has been gathered and sent to market with such precautions is conveyed into cellars, outbuildings, holes in the wall, provided with very defective ventilation, malodorous sewer pipes, all sorts of filth, etc. That is not the worst. In many instances the middleman transfers the milk from the sanitary cans in which it reaches him to other receptacles which are far from dwelling in the odor of cleanliness. In a very short time the odors and germs with which the cellar or outbuilding is polluted are communicated to the milk and it reaches the consumer in a threatening and dangerous condition. It is well known that milk is a fluid that is peculiarly susceptible to influence by its surroundings. If it is held for sale in a room reeking with typhoid and other disease germs it is soon a partaker of those poisons and it is certain to carry disease and death into many homes.

Now, is it not a fact that right here is room for immediate and radical improvement? Is it not a fact that entirely too little attention is paid to the actual condition of the average milk depot or to the habits and appearance of its inmates? Is it not a fact that while the average board of health throughout the Commonwealth carefully inspects your ash bin, your back yard, all your belongings, the alley in the rear of your residence, the cellars in the tenement districts, the filthy, unsanitary, disease-breeding milk depot is unwatched, uninvestigated, given the seal of approval? And is it just to the people, all of whom are daily customers of the dairyman or milk depot that such a condition of affairs should be permitted to exist? Does not the vigilance which looks carefully about the yards and alleys stop too soon when it fails to exercise the same oversight over the milk depots and ice cream factories. We venture the assertion that the total neglect of sanitation in these places is responsible for a considerable proportion of the sickness that annually visits the various sections of this Commonwealth.

This State should have the best possible milk inspection, an inspection that overlooks nothing, that thinks no circumstance too small to consider and that places the protection of the health of the people, both young and old, above every other consideration. But let us have an all-around inspection, a clean-cut and impartial examination all along the line. Let us avoid inspecting at one point and neglecting another quite as vital.

It is perhaps needless to say that we have many perfectly sanitary milk depots and ice cream factories in this State. To such these remarks do not apply. They would welcome the most rigorous inspection for it would only establish the claims of their proprietors that they are safe and clean.

SANITATION ON THE FARM.

Conditions on the farm have changed greatly for the better during the last quarter of a century and continue to improve with each passing year. The modern farmer may be no better than his grandfather, but he is better informed concerning the nature of soils and many other matters and this knowledge helps in every department of his work. Farm life used to be rather lonesome and monotonous. The farmer and his family worked hard and since neighbors were scarce and the demands of each passing day pressing, the social instinct often went ungratified for weeks together. That and the slavish and monotonous work explained the high percentage of insanity among the wives of farmers. The situation is vastly different now. For one thing the rural telephone line and the rural free delivery route have brought the town and the country within arm's length of each other and neighbors may now have an afternoon chat though they may be miles apart. Distance is no longer a barrier to the transaction of business or the interchange of views by the women of the farm.

We have been turning over with much interest the pages of "Farm Economies," a modest quarterly published in Baltimore and having for its purpose the education of the farmer along modern lines. The September number of this periodical is largely devoted to an illustrated discussion of the uses to which concrete can be put on the farm. The pictures speak as loudly as the writer's words for they exhibit in concrete form—no play upon words intended—the manifold advantages of this material and the diverse uses to which it can be put. There are watering troughs and tanks for the cattle; there are concrete dipping tanks and stalls for the cattle made of concrete, the floors being of the same material; there are sidewalks of concrete; there are concrete floors in the corn crib and other farm buildings; in short the buildings, the floors, the approaches, all may be constructed of cement. The advantages of using such a material are manifest to the most superficial observer. It can be kept in a sanitary state with a minimum of exertion. And that means much on the farm.

Notwithstanding all that has been said in a sentimental way about the pure air and the healthful surroundings of the country it is a notorious fact that the death rate in the rural districts has been higher than in the city for several generations. It is true that cities supplied with impure water do suffer from the ravages of typhoid fever at times, but the typhoid scourge has been an ever present factor in country life and the reader can recall rural communities in which several deaths from typhoid occur every year. This is generally due to improper sanitation or the pollution of the water supply. The distribution of such publications as "Farm Economies" among the farmers and other country residents must be productive of excellent results along the lines of sanitation, and we may soon hope for a radical reduction in the death rate on the farm. It is becoming evident to the farmer and his wife that there is a good deal of value in the teachings of modern sanitary science and they are adapting themselves more and more each year to modern conditions.

No country institution has shown more marked improvement during the last few years than the barn, especially the cow barn. The barn of to-day with its modern sanitary appliances bears little resemblance to the structure in which the cows were sheltered in the days of our grandfathers. The teachings of science have been scattered widespread and the farmer, who is usually a man of more than ordinary ability, spends a good deal of his spare time, especially in the winter, in studying the statements of such friends of his order as the editor of "Farm Economies." He soon learns that perfect sanitation means as much for him as it does for the animals on the farm. And he applies his knowledge in the direction of remedying patent defects, guarding against peril of fever from impure water or neglected drains, while at the same time he is protecting his cows from the perils which lie in wait also for the inferior animal life. The consequence is a marked advance all along the line and in ways that are going to count tremendously in the right direction in the future.

The farm of the near future, including its barns and outbuildings will be as perfect in a sanitary sense as the most carefully constructed city residence.

INSPECTION OF DAIRY FARMS.

The entire population of Pennsylvania is interested in the work of the dairy farms. Dairy products are among life's prime necessities. The children of the Commonwealth must have milk, which is likewise a necessity for many adults, and has always been one of the essentials of daily household use. We do not think of any other domestic product which is more absolutely essential to the continued existence of the race than milk. Its various products are also numbered among the necessities of the household.

While these dairy products are a universal necessity they are also peculiarly liable to taint. It is well known, but still not so well as it might be, that milk needs to be carefully guarded not only at the dairy but likewise while it is in transit or in the hands of the retail vender or in the homes of the consumer. Carelessness in the home will neutralize all the previous care taken to preserve it untainted. Upon many occasions the ignorance or thoughtlessness of the householder or of a servant has produced results which have led to severe criticism of the dairyman by those who judged without investigation.

Beginning with the month of August, the inspection of dairy farms throughout the State has been in the hands of the State Livestock Sanitary Board. The work of inspection is being directed by the executive officer of that board, Dr. C. J. Marshall, State Veterinarian. Dr. Marshall is now making an extensive tour of the State to the end that he may acquaint himself with existing conditions and needs and assist the dairy farmers in making proper corrections if any such are needed. In the beginning, as we are informed, the doctor's work will be largely along educational lines. It will be his desire to make himself and his office a really helpful agency to the dairymen.

Dr. Marshall is a very capable and kindly official. He is well acquainted with the various matters that will come under his jurisdiction in connection with this new work and will soon leave the impress of his personality upon it. He is a man who brings things to pass because he knows how. We look for great results from his work.

A GREAT DOMESTIC SCIENCE EXPOSITION.

Among the interesting and novel events of the recent past was the second domestic science and pure food exposition given under the auspices of the National Food Magazine. This exposition was held in Madison Square Garden, New York, and was a very great success in every respect.

Among the other peculiarities of this exposition was the fact that it was practically cosmopolitan in its scope, with a single exception. The line was rigidly drawn when the quality of food exhibits was considered. No food product was admitted to the exposition unless its purity was guaranteed. No foods containing chemical preservatives, no foods cheapened and weakened by adulteration were admitted. The standard was higher even than that set by the food laws of the nation and the several states. It not only required that the products exhibited should be entirely free from all harmful chemicals or other injurious preservatives, but also that the factories from which they came should be up to the highest sanitary requirements.

Another peculiarity of this exposition was the fact that its agents went out into the open markets and purchased samples of food products that were analyzed immediately and the results written in bold letters on blackboards placed conveniently for the inspection of the spectators and visitors. Thus the exposition constituted a valuable school of instruction, teaching by direct object lessons precisely what certain products offered for human consumption contained, as well as the probable effect upon the human body. There is no method of teaching more instructive or more forcible than this of practical illustration. This feature alone of the exposition must have been of immense service in the work of diffusing correct knowledge concerning food products. The National Food Magazine could not readily have discovered a more practical way of serving the consuming public and giving due credit to conscientious and upright manufacturers than by the methods it employed. And it has demonstrated itself a very effective force in the great work of driving unsanitary and dangerous food products out of the market. The more frequently and forcibly the light of truth falls upon the processes employed in food manufacture the better.

This exposition was not only notable for the methods employed, but likewise in the character and personality of those who attended and participated in its various sessions. The most notable figures, under the circumstances, were Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, chief chemist of the federal department of agriculture, and his bride. The latter made her maiden speech as Mrs. Wiley in the Domestic Science congress and the former was greatly interested in all he saw. Mayor Gaynor, of New York City, was also a notable visitor. Dr. A. D. Melvin, chief of the United States bureau of animal industry, was among the speakers and he likewise superintended the government exhibit of his bureau work. George M. Whitaker, head of the market milk investigations of the United States, gave a much appreciated steriopticon lecture on "Sane and Safe Milk". Among other experts present we note George W. Stiles, bacteriological chemist of the United States bureau of chemistry; Mrs. Anna B. Scott, the famous cooking expert and economist, of Philadelphia; Mrs. Kate Waller Barrett, national president of the Florence Crittenden Mission; Bert M. Fernald, former governor of Maine, who represented the National Canners' Association, and Dr. Eugene Porter, health Commissioner of New York State.

In addition to the foregoing there was a notable gathering of food officials, including Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust, of Pennsylvania; Dr. Lucius P. Brown, of Tennessee, president of the Association of State and National Food and Dairy Departments; J. S. Abbott, food Commissioner of Texas; R. M. Allen, who holds the same office in Kentucky; S. E. Strode, state food Commissioner of Ohio; George L. Flanders, of the New York state agricultural department. All these gentlemen spoke during the progress of the exposition concerning vital topics of the hour in connection with the protection of the public health against food adulteration.

In fact the exposition was universal in its scope as all who were present readily recognized. There was a notable assemblage of food manufacturers. The Association for the Protection of Purity in Food Products held a meeting in the Garden and appointed a committee to go to Washingon to be present during the revision of the National Food and Drugs law and to use its influence for effective food legislation and strict enforcement of law in the states and nation. The manufacturers were not only there in force, but their brightest representatives were on the programme and what they said delighted, instructed and encouraged their hearers. Many stewards and chefs were present from various sections and they had notable representation on the programme. Representatives were present from no less than forty women's organizations. They likewise had place on the programme and heartily participated in the proceedings. One day was wholly given over to the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs. Other special days were observed and much interest was manifested in this feature of the exposition. The New York Daughters of the Revolution supplied an entire session of the programme and so did the Women's Suffrage party.

We have merely glanced at this great exposition. The reader who was not present may obtain a faint idea of its work from the short summary herewith given, but it is difficult for one who did not see with his own eyes and hear with his own ears to grasp the strength and completeness of the whole. It was certainly a great credit to the National Food Magazine.

PAPER READ BY JAMES FOUST BEFORE THE PENNSYLVANIA ICE CREAM MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION, AT ALTOONA, PA., NOVEMBER 23rd, 1911.

It was with pleasure that I accepted your courteous invitation to address you on this occasion. Your business is, in some respects one of the most interesting among the food industries, because ice cream, so recently a rare luxury, has come to be an article of every day consumption not only in the houses of wealth, but as well in the cottage of the laborer. The volume to which ice cream production has grown and the frequency with which it is eaten, make the quality of of the product sold under that name, of importance to practically every citizen.

In some ways, your line of production is much of a fine art, and like other fine arts, requires a good measure of freedom of action. The business has, however, other sides fully as important in which the expectations of the public are to be met. In other days it was said, "Let the buyer beware"; but to-day it is recognized that the variety of product is too great to make all his wariness sufficient to protect the buyer. so the saying is being changed to "Let the seller beware";—that is, let him be careful that his customer receives that for which he asks, both as regards kind and quality. The public holds the dealer largely responsible for the welfare of the customer. The bigger the business, the greater the responsibility.

Much of the business of food preparation has left the home and gone to the factory. People have always been interested to know what they were eating, but where the factory takes the place of the house-wife, they insist all the more on this knowledge. The fact that their trust has so often been abused, makes their insistence all the greater. The game of "Open your mouth and shut your eyes" does not work as well as it used to, and he is a wise producer who recognizes the fact and adapts his methods accordingly. If we study the development of business enterprises, we find that the consumer appreciates and is willing to pay for scrupulous care of his interests and for frankness.

These conditions are leading to a more exact naming of commercial food articles, a matter of particular interest to lines of production, such as yours, in which many producers have made numerous varieties which they have called by but one name, a name which fails in many cases to indicate the real nature of the chief materials used. It is said that this variety is required by difference in the taste of customers. That may be. It is, however, more often due to a desire for greater profit by the maker or dealer. Certainly if the tastes of customers be the reason for substituting evaporated milk, for example, for cream, it would be of advantage to tell the customer that this substitute has been used, so that he may, if that really is his preference, choose this product instead of one made from cream.

Simply as a matter of square dealing, I stand for the general principal that the names of all foods should indicate to the consumer what their real nature is; and, accordingly, hold that evaporated milk products should not be sold as ice cream.

Again, without attempting, at this time, to express a conclusion as to the best fat standard for ice cream, it is my judgment that the demand, and the profit, will grow if the fat standard be increased beyond the present legal limit.

On the other hand, recognizing the decorative values and uses of ice cream, I would not handicap the producer's art more than is needful to guard against unwholesomeness of the product and deception as to its nature and quality.

There is another side of ice cream production to which I would refer in closing—the sanitary side.

While the majority, probably, of your membership, exercise great care that the ice cream they make shall be prepared in a cleanly way from sanitary and wholesome materials, not all of your craft show such consideration for the health and sentiments of their customers.

Certainly it is to your interest that the general credit of your industry shall be protected from injury by the ignorance and filthiness of the relatively few who uses impure cream and milk, make ice cream in dirty places, and sell it in containers not kept properly cleaned. Another undesirable practice has been called to my notice, that of the dealer buying back and repacking for sale, the ice cream left over at picnics, festivals, and the like. The conditions under which such cream has been kept, surely offer no guarantees that it will be returned clean and sound to the dealer. I do not know much about ptomaine poisoning, but certainly there are enough rumors of its sometimes being caused by ice cream, to make it good business on your part to insist that a few ice cream producers shall not be allowed to continue practices that would reflect upon the credit and threaten the business success of the trade as a whole. I shall be pleased to have your advice and co-operation in devising measures to protect the public and yourselves from injuries of this sort.

MILK SUPPLY IN LARGE GERMAN TOWNS.

One of the most important questions confronting consumers in the large German towns is that of the milk supply. Not only does milk, with bread and meat, form the most important food of the whole population of the German empire, but since it is the principal nutriment of children and of the sick, the possibility of an abundant supply of pure and cheap milk becomes not only an economic but also a social and sanitary problem deserving of every consideration.

Nor need it be mentioned that in these days in which the price of all foods has risen appreciably, the rise in price of milk, though perhaps less appreciably than in the case of other articles of food, has yet occasioned much discontent throughout Germany and other lands and sometimes even strong protest on the part of the consumers. If this rise in price may be explained by the increased cost of cattle, forage, labor, etc., and that of carriage, since, as the cities grow, milk must be brought from more and more distant centres of production, yet it must not be forgotten that an important factor of the price is the gain of the middlemen.

Milk in its journey from the country producer to the town consumer often passes through the hands of two or three dealers, each of whom naturally receives his appreciable profit. So while the increased price is a burden on the consumer, it does not reach the profits of the producers and is no gain to national agriculture. It is therefore a wise policy to reduce to a minimum, if not to eliminate entirely, the work of the middlemen and while this would be an economic gain, it would certainly be no loss from a sanitary point of view, as there would be no more superfluous and injurious manipulation of the milk.

It is, therefore, interesting to observe what is being done in the matter in Germany, where the problem is considered of such importance that there has been an agitation for a law to regulate the milk trade in a uniform manner and to guarantee its purity. We are helped in this study by the data given in an article in the August number of the Bulletin of Economic and Social Intelligence, published by the International Institute of Agriculture.

First of all we must observe that in some German towns the problem was to some extent solved by large establishments like those at Berlin and at Dresden, whose large trade, immediate contact with the producers and scientific utilization of waste products, permit of their selling at reasonable prices, while the very importance and the name of the establishments guarantee the purity and genuiness of the article. In 1909 the Berlin dairy alone sold 44 millions of litres of milk at 22 pf. the litre for unseparated milk, delivered at the dairy, and 24 pf. if delivered at the customer's house, that is 27 and 30 centimes respectively. The work of the Dresden dairy is only a little less important.

But if large establishments are already an appreciable gain, they tend too easily to become monopolies. Therefore, the co-operative organizations are of special interest, as they take the place of the middlemen, and in this way the profits are reaped directly by the consumers in the case of co-operative distribution societies, and by the farmers in the case of societies for production.

While forty years ago the producers were quite isolated, the co operative movement has made such progress among them that in 1908 there were almost 3,000 co-operative dairies in Germany, with about 260,000 members which provide for the scientific supervision, preparation and treatment of the milk. Quite half of these local co-operative societies already sell their milk directly, but their action, to be efficacious, must be integrated with that of the central dairies which have sufficient means and a large commercial organization.

In this way there have arisen central dairies in Berlin, Stuttgard, Hamburg and other German towns. If some of these, and notably the two first, do not answer all the hopes raised by them, they yet exert a beneficent action in regulating the market and setting a limit to the growth of monopolies, and some have given really brilliant results.

The most important of these associations as yet is Hamburg, which includes twenty-five co-operative societies with 2,800 members and can dispose of the milk of quite 28,000 cows. Not without struggle has it succeeded in getting its strong position on the market by means of a wise system of prices overcoming the difficulties that opposed its progress and becoming the chief supplier of the commercial co-operative societies and of the whole city of Hamburg.

In this way its annual sales have arisen from 49 million of litres in 1901-1902 to 63 millions in 1909-1910, while the unsold milk, 13 millions of litres in the later working year, was made into cheese and other produce. The members of the society are, for the most part, owners of small or medium-sized farms, who therefore directly profit by the economies and improvements of the association. It has been of appreciable benefit to them, not only in respect to the sales, but also by means of assiduous technical and sanitary supervision, it encourages them to produce a better quality and at the same time a larger quantity.

CANDY STATEMENT.

Harrisburg, Pa. Since James Foust has been at the head of the Dairy and Food Bureau of the Department of Agriculture in Pennsylvania, he has been confronted by a number of difficult problems, but when these matters of administration lay entirely within the bounds of the Keystone State, there has been but little difficulty in adjustment as local dealers and manufacturers have always been ready to meet the authorities in a friendly spirit and assist in correcting any existing evil.

However, there are other forces to be dealt with in that some manufacturers outside the State do not scruple to foist upon the trade foodstuffs made from inferior and deleterious materials that enables them to undersell local men and deceive the consuming public. Among the most glaring of these at present is the cheap grades of candies covered with varnish and shellac, commonly referred to as resinous glazes, which Commissioner Foust pronounces as unsanitary and in violation of the general food act approved May 13, 1909, in that confectionery coated with a resinous glaze affects the quality, strength and purity, also conceals inferiority and is injurious to health; and, following his ruling on the question made some time ago, he has already entered some fifteen suits against offenders selling this class of goods, and there will be more to follow.

The Commissioner in speaking of the matter said that in some samples his agents had collected, he found that the varnish and shellac applied to the confections had rendered them as hard as flint, and the effect on the stomach of the child could not help being injurious, as any layman who uses shellac to cover wood could easily determine for himself without the aid of any expert. The shellac is used simply to cheapen and preserve his product for the manufacturer, without the slighest reference to the health of the consumer or any other consideration except that of pure selfishness and commercial profit.

But in dealing with the powerful forces in the commercial world who would further their own interests at the expenses of the public, every resource of the Department will have to be marshaled for the fight, and the Commissioner has already arranged with the Federal authorities to secure their hearty and active co-operation. United States District Attorney John H. Jordan, of the Western District of Pennsylvania, will assist in the matter, as will also Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry at Washington, whose experts will be present at the trial of the cases to give testimony.

The following is an extract from a letter received from Dr. Wiley by Commissioner Foust a few days ago:

"In so far as the cases have been put to me I have never yet had presented to me a glazed sample of confectionery, which in my opinion did not in some matter come within the scope of inhibition of the law. Either the glaze itself contained indigestible material which must of necessity work injury, especially in the child's stomach, or it concealed some kind of inferiority, or it injuriously affected the quality and strength of the material, or it permitted unsanitary handling, or permitted the goods to be held for a long time and sold with appearance of freshness."

In preparing for the State wide crusade, Commissioner Foust has Governor John K. Tener and Attorney General John C. Bell to hold up his hands, and the State cases will be prosecuted by Attorneys A. H. Woodward of Clearfield and Hon. Lyman D. Gilbert of Harrisburg. As has already been intimated, the Commissioner is not trying to make trouble for the honest manufacturer and dealer in Pennsylvania, but said this morning that "he desired that the retailer should protect himself in his buying and not be caught with a large quantity of the goods of the character indicated, as he would not be allowed to sell them to the public, for every county in the State will be thoroughly canvassed for goods of the kind."

THE WOMEN'S CLUBS AND THE NEWSPAPERS.

Among the most potent forces working for the enforcement of pure food laws and the creation of a better sentiment among the rank and file of the people must be placed the women's clubs and the newspapers. The Bulletin has referred to these valuable allies of the pure food officials in other numbers, but it feels that the splendid work the women's clubs and the newspapers have done during recent years entitles them to the special gratitude of all who are interested in driving adulterated or doped food products out of the markets.

The women's clubs contain the picked women of the land. They contain in most instances, the influential heads of households. These ladies are keenly alive to the pressing problems of the day, especially those effecting the home. Long ago they recognized the danger and the expense of impure or adulterated food and they set to work with their usual zeal and enthusiasm to bring about a better condition of affairs. These club women understand the advantages of federation. They realize that in union there is strength. When one club member proposes any action of supreme importance it soon becomes the property of all the clubs and of all the individuals who compose their membership.

The influence of the women's organizations has always been consistently exerted on behalf of the enforcement of pure food laws. That influence has been more effective than a host of agents. For they reach their own sex with convincing arguments concerning the important matter of pure food. They train their sisters to examine the labels with care, to reject adulterated articles and to demand pure goods. Thus they move upon the grocer who soon discovers that it does not pay to offer counterfeit or debased articles to his intelligent patrons. Public sentiment is more powerful than law in bringing the careless or avaricious manufacturer or vender to his senses.

Nor has the work of the newspapers been less effective. At this moment we recall scarcely one newspaper of prominence that is not decidely upon the side of pure food and strongly against dopes, adulterations and preservatives of the chemical variety. The newspapers inform the consumer and warn the producer. They have made the retention of Dr. Wiley possible at the head of the chemical bureau of the department of agriculture, at Washington, making the machinations of his enemies of no effect. They have constantly turned on the light with such good effect that those who for selfish reasons would overturn our pure food laws are now on the retreat and are apparently convinced that public sentiment is too much for them.

Perhaps the consumer of our nation do not yet fully realize the debt of gratitude they owe the forces referred to in this article. The women's clubs and the newspapers have looked at the food problem from almost the same angle. Both are strongly impressed with the necessity of providing pure food for the use of the American people and both are doing much to make that notion an actual fact. They have done more to make the food laws of the nation and the several states effective than all other influences combined. They are entitled to the sincere gratitude of every food officer as well as the thanks and gratitude of the consumer. We assume that their splendid endeavors will be continued and we hope their influence will grow with each passing day.

RESINOUS GLAZES ON CANDY.

Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust has issued the following statement relative to the matter of resinous glazes upon candies—a matter that has been the subject of considerable controversy with the trade.

Some months ago Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust issued a ruling which declared that the use of resinous glazes upon confectionery and chocolate is deemed to be in violation of the general Food Act of May 13th, 1909.

Mr. D. L. Morgan, Secretary of the National Jobbing Confectioners' Association on behalf of certain Pennsylvania Manufacturing Confectioners, represented that this ruling of the Commissioner very seriously affected the Pennsylvania trade, since these glazes are used especially on Easter goods, of which, according to Mr. Morgan, Pennsylvania manufactures two-thirds of the entire output of the country. Mr. Morgan contended especially that Pennsylvania's Rule 14 is far more drastic than Federal Decision No. 119 on the same subject in that under the Federal regulations glazes are permitted provided the same are declared upon the label of the package or container, and that in consequence of the more rigid Pennsylvania rule, Pennsylvania manufacturers are placed at a serious disadvantage in competing with manufacturers of other states. Mr. Morgan urged that the trade be promptly informed whether Pennsylvania means to enforce its rule beyond the lines of the Federal Decisions.

Recently, a conference was held at Washington between Dr. Harvey W. Wiley and Dr. R. E. Doolittle comprising a majority of the Federal Board of Food and Drug Inspection and Commissioner Foust, Chief Counsel, A. H. Woodward, and Chief Chemist, Dr. Wm. Frear, of the Pennsylvania Food Bureau, at which were considered the differences, if any, between the Federal and State regulation upon this subject with a view to securing harmony of action.

As a result of said conference, it was concluded that the Pennsylvania rule upon the subject is not more drastic than the Federal regulation. There is a misapprehension on the part of the trade as to the effect of that part of Federal Decision which permits the sale of confectionery coated with a glaze provided that the presence of the glaze be declared upon the label. It is held by the Federal Board that such labeling relieves the manufacturer from the charge of misbranding only, but not from a charge of adulteration in case the glaze employed constitutes in any respect violation of any of the sections of the National Act relating to adulterations. In other words, that if the glaze constitute an adulteration in any respect, the mere declaring of the glaze upon the label will not relieve from prosecution under the clauses of the National Act relating to adulterations.

At the conclusion of the conference, at the request of Commissioner Foust, Dr. Wiley expressed in writing his judgment concerning the use of resinous glazes, as follows:

"United States Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Chemistry,
Washington, D. C.,
October 19, 1911.

"Honorable James Foust,
Commissioner, Harrisburg, Pa.
"Dear Mr. Foust:

"I have your inquiry concerning my opinion on the scope of Food Inspection Decision No. 119. In my opinion this decision is in exact harmony with the Federal Law. The Federal law could not prohibit the use of glaze to which no injurious substances had been added and which in itself is not injurious which does not conceal inferiority, and which does not injuriously affect the quality or purity of the product. As the addition of a glaze to a confection makes a compound article, it is illegal to use any kind of a glaze without a statement to that effect. This statement does not, however, justify in any way any adulteration that may take place but simply cures the offense of misbranding. In so far as the cases have been put up to me I have never yet had presented to me a glazed sample of confectionery which in my opinion did not in some manner come within the scope of inhibition of the law. Either the glaze itself contained some added injurious substance or the glaze itself was an indigestible material which must of necessity work injury, especially in the child's stomach, or it concealed some kind of inferiority, or it injuriously affected the quality and strength of the material, or it permitted insanitary handling without leaving marks by which it could be discovered, or permitted the goods to be kept for a long while and sold with the appearance of freshness, or in some other way offended the law.

"In my opinion the safe way for the manufacturers would be to produce wholesome, pure and attractive articles of confectionery which do not need the services of a glaze.

"Respectfully,
H. M. Wiley,
Chief."

The Commissioner then met the representatives of the confectioners' trade and gave them plainly to understand that Revised Rule 14 would be strictly followed in enforcing the food law and that he would take pains to serve notice upon each retail dealer that the sale of chocolate and confectionery, including, of course, Easter goods, coated with resinous glazes would be made the subject of prosecutions, and that if the retailer, after such notice, was guilty of continuing to sell such goods, he would not be protected by any guaranty, and would be proceeded against personally. The Commissioner further stated that he desired that the retailer should protect himself in his buying and not be caught with a large quantity of the goods of the character indicated, as he would not be allowed to sell the same to the public.

CONCERNING THE STATE'S MILK SUPPLY.

The readers of the Monthly Bulletin may find it not wholly unprofitable to examine with attention the list of suits and prosecutions in this number, noting the large proportion of milk cases terminated. The publication of these cases shows quite conclusively that the milk act which was approved by Governor Tener June 8, 1911, did not become a law a moment too soon. If the milk supply of the State had been what the public health requires the enactment of the new law would not have been followed by so many prosecutions. On the contrary a proper grade of milk and cream would have been unaffected by the act and its venders instead of being haled before the courts would have been vindicated in the sight of their patrons and the general public.

A careful scrutiny of the record of prosecutions clearly shows that nearly every section of Pennsylvania was visited by agents of the dairy and food bureau. They were instructed to lift samples of milk and cream wherever they went, and they carried out their instructions. Wherever the milk was found to be below the standard in butter fat and milk solids, or wherever cream was found to be below 18 per cent., proceedings were instituted and the offending parties were each fined $25. This large revenue was turned into the State Treasury for the use of the Commonwealth. The campaign inaugurated under the law for pure milk, for milk of a better quality, will be continued until the milk supply of Pennsylvania is fully up to the standard required by law, a reasonable and just standard, fair to the consumer and not unjust to the vender.

The fact that milk is one of the absolute necessities of life and that impure milk is the cause of many deaths every year, especially of children, furnishes the all sufficient justification of the State when it insists upon purity and a proper proportion of butter fat and milk solids in the milk sold to the people. Sometime dairymen think they are treated unjustly, but if they will reflect for a moment upon the office of milk as an article of diet and upon the importance of its being pure and good they will agree that the State has not transcended its obligations to the consumer in the enactment of the law of June 8, 1911.

UNIFORMITY IN PRACTICE.

While uniformity of practice between the State and the Nation is not necessary to the most effective enforcement of the food and drink laws of the country, yet it is conceded that such uniformity would be a step in the right direction, and that for various reasons. Much can be done in the desired direction by the cultivation of friendly relations between the authorities of the national food bureau and the representatives of the several states. A friendly conference frequently goes a great way to dispel the mists of prejudice and to provoke mutual concessions.

It would certainly be very considerable advantage to the large manufacturers of food products if the regulations were similar in all the states of the union and if the federal rules were largely duplicated by those of the several states. Under existing conditions the manufacturer who has an honest ambition to comply with law frequently finds himself at fault as to the precise wording of a certain State act, or as to how far he may go without running counter to some local regulation of which, no matter what his diligence or his vigilance, he does not possess accurate knowledge. This sort of a situation is certainly embarrassing and expensive to the manufacturer. And the more extensive his trade the more complicated his troubles become.

Some of the signs of the times suggest a growing disposition among pure food representatives to take steps toward arriving at a reasonable agreement. The annual meeting of National and State dairy and food officials has promoted mutual acquaintance and created opportunities for discussions and comparisons along this line that promise to be followed by valuable results. When the Nation and the several states see eye to eye and face to face many of the obstacles in the way have already vanished and the outlook for the future is brightening from day to day. But if there is to be a mutual understanding the federal goverment must make some of the advances. It would be unreasonable to expect a State like Pennsylvania, for instance, to abandon the high ground she already occupies. Others must advance to her standard if the highest good is to be subserved.

WHEREIN THE WRONG CONSISTS.

Oleomargarine is a legitimate product of an extensive industry, Its manufacture and sale is lawful. The maker and dealer in this product are entitled to the protection of the state and federal governments so long as they comply with the provisions of law. If consumers desire to buy and eat oleomargarine as a substitute for butter there is nothing in either the federal or the state law that will interfere. It is as just as lawful to buy oleomargarine as it is to buy any other product.

The complaint of the butter makers and of many lovers of that product is not against the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine as such but against the processes which are well calculated to deceive the thoughtless purchaser. The complaint is that colored oleomargarine is prepared to closely resemble butter, put up in prints like butter and called by well-known creamery names, evidently with the intention of making those who do not observe very closely think the article is genuine yellow butter.

There seems to be a real grievance in the complaint of the butter makers. Even with the restriction now existing by reason of Federal and State laws, it not infrequently happens that the rank and file are grossly deceived. When a purchaser carelessly buys oleomargarine in mistake for butter, the product being properly marked and the dealer making no effort to deceive, he is alone to blame. That there are many such careless persons in the world is clear, and it is charged that the oleomargarine people endeavor to make their product resemble butter for the reason that they are not unfamiliar with the inattention of the average purchaser.

There ought to be no discrimination against oleomargarine when it is put on the market in its original garb and sold for precisely what it is. But those who purchase the oleomargarine in its original state, convey it to noisome cellars or other unsanitary places and there transform it into "yellow butter" which they dispose of to the unsupecting housewife are violating law and deceiving the public. Such persons deserve the severest punishment the law will inflict. They are unscrupulous lawbreakers and are entitled to no consideration whatever.

THE GLAZING OF CANDY.

The rulings of the Federal Department of Agriculture and of the Dairy and Food Division of the State of Pennsylvania concerning the glazing of candy are not so very far apart, after all. By reference to an article in another part of this Bulletin it will be seen that the wisest course open to manufacturers of Easter confectionery is to abandon the glaze. It may improve the looks of their products and it may be perfectly harmless, but so long as there is a possibility of doubt it is scarcely worth while to incur the risk.

It will be perceived that Dr. Wiley advises the manufacturers to give up the glaze. The Federal law permits it, as such. The Federal regulation concerning this matter, however, only covers the misbranding of the article in question. Dr. Wiley, in an official communication to Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust, expresses the conviction that almost all glazes contain substances that adulterate the articles to which they are applied. And while the Federal regulation permits the glazing it does not permit adulteration.

Pennsylvania's law forbids the sale of confectionery that has been put through the glazing process. Commissioner Foust announces that this provision of the general food law will be strictly enforced. He makes the announcement in ample time to prevent retail dealers inviting prosecution or loss from unsalable goods during the holiday or Easter season and neither he nor the statute will be to blame in any way if certain careless or reckless citizens find themselves in the meshes of the law in the not distant future. If anything of the sort happens it will be entirely their own fault.

The retail grocers, the confectioners, all who deal in holiday candy, will be properly notified, although the law requires nothing of the sort, concerning the determination of the bureau to enforce the provisions of Rule 14, for the protection of the health of children and others. The public health is a matter of far more importance than the appearance of holiday confectionery, and with that statement every thoughtful head of a household will surely agree. The State should supervise the quality of the goods produced for consumption by our boys and girls.

A COMPREHENSIVE ACT OF ASSEMBLY.

While some surprise has been expressed at the suggestion that it is the duty of the Dairy and Food Commissioner, acting by himself or through his agents, to supervise the quality of the nuts, fruits and other articles offered for sale by confectioners and fruit dealers, a little reflection will convince the student of passing events that the interference of the Dairy and Food Bureau is not only perfectly legitimate but is actually required by the spirit of the law. And the thing is going to be done systematically and impartially from time to time until vigilance has entirely driven out carelessness.

The end and aim of the pure food statues of this Commonwealth may be easily comprehended. The laws are meant to protect the consumer from injury by the dealer. Fraud or deception in the sale of any article is a violation of law. The State presumes that the citizen has a right to the worth of his money. It recognizes the fact that he is not an expert and it undertakes by its statutes to take care of his interests. The manufacturer or vender has no reason to complain. It is his duty to give a proper return for the money he receives. The most effective way in which he can do this is to pay particular attention to the quality of the goods he sells.

There is no reason why the sale of stale goods to those who can illy afford to pay out good money for them should be permitted to go on unhindered or unnoticed by the representatives of the State. If the sale of second hand nuts, rotten or unripe fruit or similar articles is to go on unmolested the former rule of carelessness might just as well be reintroduced and everybody be permitted to sell whatever commended itself to their fancy or their ingenuity. If there is any fair argument in favor of a strict oversight of the grocery business the same argument applies to fruits and nuts which are also a part of human nature's daily food. It is a notorious fact that in times past these matters have been almost wholly neglected. But the law is a comprehensive one and its rigid enforcement is required by considerations of the public welfare. Wise dealers will comprehend the situation and govern their conduct accordingly.

EDUCATION FOR THE DAIRYMAN.

The Butter, Cheese and Egg Journal, a sprightly Milwaukee publication, is convinced that every butter and cheese maker who wishes to rise to the top of his profession should take a course in a dairy school. It believes that practice in the manufacture of butter and cheese is not sufficient in these modern days of big business. It affirms that it is very advantageous to possess a knowledge of the principles lying back of the manufacture of these important articles of human food.

We think the Butter, Cheese and Egg Journal is entirely right. The day has gone by when the practical man who understands his business despises theories and principles. He came to understand long ago and he learns a little more about it each passing year, that knowledge obtained in the schools never harmed any sensible human being. That is one reason why the plain father and mother who didn't have the opportunities that now confront their children are insisting that those children shall acquire the learning of the schools as well as the practical knowledge gained on the farm or in the work of the dairy.

The Milwaukee paper is very much in earnest about this matter and we don't blame it. As a good friend of the farmers and dairymen into whose homes it carries its various practical messages from month to month it is only doing its duty when it points out to the young members of those families the duties and the opportunities which lie right before them. It tells them that the dairy schools teach the very things it is important for practical dairymen to know and that in consequence of this essential fact the students and graduates of those schools are in great demand.

It is also quite within the bounds of reason when it assures the intending dairyman that a proper education, one that enables him to bring things to pass will materially add to his income by increasing the demand for his services. It is always the man who knows how who is master of the situation. And this is going to be even increasingly true in the coming years. For more and more the dairy as well as all other departments of human activity requires experience, knowledge and ability.

THE MAN WHO NEVER LEARNS ANYTHING.

While the pure food laws of Pennsylvania and the rules and regulations made in pursuance of their requirements are somewhat drastic in their requirements and relentless in their operations, they are by no means hard upon the retailer who takes pains to familarize himself with their provisions and to comply with their requirements. They were framed for the purpose of protecting the consuming public, but at the same time they propose to take care of the retailer, if he will permit.

The retailer need only take the precaution to procure from the manufacturer or wholesaler from whom he purchases his supplies a guaranty, as provided for by the general food law of the State. Armed with such a legal document he may await with complacency and confidence any analysis of the products sold by him which the State may see fit to make. If it be discovered that he is selling an adulterated product he simply need exhibit his guaranty to the authorized agent of the dairy and food division, or to the proper officer. The responsibility is thus removed from him and placed upon the shoulders of the manufacturer or wholesaler from whom he made the purchase. Nothing could be simpler.

And yet simple as the method is there are retailers in the State who never seem able to grasp the fact that unless they avail themselves of the provisions of the act they cannot invoke its aid. If they neglect to procure a guaranty, or if they persist in continuing the sale of adulterated or misbranded goods after having been formally notified of the condition of the said goods, they put themselves outside the pale of law. And some of them do it. Then when trouble comes, as it almost always does, for trouble has a habit of camping on the trail of the careless or the indifferent, they try to put the responsibility on the State or its officers, instead of upon their own shoulders, where it really belongs.

Don't you think it extremely singular that men for whom the law undertakes to do so very much are unable or unwilling to claim its protection? And do you really believe that they have any right to complain when trouble seizes them? Are they to be pitied or blamed for their great carelessness? At all events they bring their trouble upon themselves.

THE FEDERAL FOOD AND DRUGS ACT.

There is some reason to expect a slight acceleration of speed and activity upon the part of the Federal government in the work of enforcing the provisions of the National food and drugs act. Not that much good has not been done already, for the situation is very much better than it was five or six years ago. Still, there seldom was a condition of affairs that was ideal. The man who looks with all his might can usually find some place in which a bit of patching up is desirable.

Recent interesting events in connection with the organization of the personnel of the active agents of the bureau of food and drinks, under the Secretary of Agriculture, have put a new appearance upon things. There was an impression abroad that the enemies of pure food had succeeded in capturing the working force and the result was much irritation and considerable apprehension. President Taft, however, has made certain recommendations which have been acted upon very promptly by the Secretary of Agriculture, much to the satisfaction of the consumers.

It is greatly to the advantage of any department of the government, State or National, that it be under the direction of men who are governed by a sincere desire to promote the greatest good of the greatest number and that they be strengthened and encouraged by the knowledge that popular sentiment is strenuously backing up their efforts to bring about general obedience to law. If the working force of the department be in the confidence of the public the knowledge that such is the fact will deepen their zeal, strengthen their enthusiasm, intensify their determination to do their duty and thus aid in the enforcement of just laws.

The Federal food and drugs act became a part of the Federal statutes more than five years ago. It came as the answer of the congress to a very general demand from consumers for protection against unscrupulous manufacturers. It is a reasonable and moderate act. Its judicious enforcement throughout the jurisdiction of the Nation will promote the public health, strengthen the satisfaction of the consumer and do no harm to honest manufacturers of foodstuffs.

EDUCATION OF THE PEOPLE STILL NEEDED.

In a certain city of Pennsylvania a women who sells bread and cakes, who has been trained in the good old-fashioned principles of cleanliness and likewise given some lessons concerning the peril that lurks in bread and cake that have been traveled over many times by the common house fly, was in the habit of keeping her cakes and bread carefully covered during the months when the fly invades every accessible place.

She tells the editor of the Bulletin that her experiences during the past summer were rather trying. She wanted to be honest with the public; she wanted to be an obedient servant of law; and yet circumstances were such that she came pretty near developing into a cynic during those summer months. She is a fine baker. She takes special pains with the bread and cakes she bakes, always using proper materials and taking a wholesome pride in the superior quality of all she prepares for the market.

She says that another baker whose stand was close by hers did not trouble herself to cover her products. "And many times during the summer," she declared, "people went right by my cakes because they were covered and made their purchases from my neighbor whose stand and everything upon it, was fairly black with flies. The majority of folks never seem to think of the flies. They see my goods covered up and pass on to my neighbor who has no scruples of conscience against selling fly-tainted goods. It is true that a few folks do notice the difference and do buy from me, but they are few and far between. Now, what am I to do? Shall I continue to obey the State law, or shall I imitate my neighbor and let the flies have full access to my goods? I cannot afford to bake bread and cakes and take them to market for the sake of showing them off; and yet I don't like to give the flies the freedom of the goods."

This incident simply shows the necessity of a continued vigorous effort to educate the people concerning the dire peril that the common house fly carries on its wings and its feet. It is amazing that in this age of the world and after so much has been said and written the majority of the attendants at any city market deliberately prefer to purchase fly-infected goods when a clean and wholesome article is right at their hand.

ALLEGED ADVANTAGES OF THE LOCAL CREAMERY.

The Butter, Cheese and Egg Journal, a sprightly weekly published in Milwaukee, whose mission in this world is clearly suggested by its title, declares that "the local creamery is the greatest institution that any agriculture community can have next to the little red school house." And a good many folks will agree with that statement. The Journal thinks it is remarkable the way the local creameries have been able to build up the agricultural interests and increase the agricultural wealth of their respective communities. The existence of a creamery is pretty sure testimony to the presence of a lot of thrifty and progressive farmers. These local creameries, we are told have produced the great wealth now represented by the creamery business.

Having emphasized the advantages derived from these local institutions the Journal regrets a disposition in certain quarters to permit them to fall into decay. The situation of the farmer was greatly improved by their creation for the reason that his cream was promptly taken by the creamery and just as promptly transformed into butter. The former practice of holding cream until it had become stale was no longer necessary. It was collected promptly and just as promptly applied to the manufacture of good butter. The centralization idea does not commend itself to this authority. It is at variance with the views expressed in the article dealing with the trend of the dairying business in Germany, although the two articles deal with different phases of the milk problem.

It is suggested that the local creameries are needed not only for the prompt and proper collection and utilization of the farmers' cream, but likewise to prevent "the enormous egg losses which the country suffers at the present time." It is said that the eggs are now held at the farm until a large percentage of them are rather worse than worthless when they reach the customer. The local creamery could be utilized by the farmer in their egg business because it could gather eggs as frequently as it now gathers cream and dispose of them just as expeditiously. In short, the Milwaukee publication is very much opposed to the centralization of the creamery industry.

CONCERNING THE CARELESS PURCHASER.

The Housekeeper remarked the other day that she did hope the day would soon come when the pure food laws would be so construed, both State and National, as to prohibit any admixtures or combinations which cheapen the value and reduce the quality of any article of food. She believes that the ideal toward which all officials should work is absolutely purity. She fears that the households of the land get many inferior mixtures, in spite of the labels, for the reason that it is the exceptional person who reads the label or who comprehends its full import when it has been read.

She declares that many an imitation, properly labeled and thus absolved by law from any responsibilities or penalities, gets into households that would have none of it if the family buyer would simply take the pains to get posted concerning the meaning of various terms and then act accordingly. She is impressed by the fact that a very large proportion of the buyers for family use never examine the labels on the goods they purchase and would not comprehend their meaning if they did. They simply go to the family grocer and ask for a certain product. The grocer hands them an article which may be an imitation of the genuine thing or which may possibly be weakened by foreign admixtures and yet complies with the law because the label specifies the nature of the container's contents.

The Housekeeper says she has made it part of her business to watch this thing and she feels persuaded that the labels do not afford the general purchasing public the protection intended and to which they are entitled. A very considerable proportion of the population of this country is not very familiar with the English language. When a package declares that it contains one-tenth of one per cent. of benzoate of soda, or a certain lawful proportion of some other preservative or adulterant, the statement has no meaning to them. They never look at it. They have secured an article of food for which they pay the grocer the price demanded and that ends the matter, so far as they are concerned. And this is also true of a considerable proportion of the native born. They have not yet become educated up to the point of watching their food purchases and insisting upon getting nothing but the genuine article.

VENDERS OF COUNTERFEIT SAUSAGE CONVICTED.

W. F. Hill, of Huntingdon, special agent of the dairy and food bureau, sent into the office in one day recently $600 fines imposed in six sausage cases in Huntingdon and Mifflin counties. The dealers sold sausage containing vegetable flour and added water, a violation of the law of this Commonwealth.

Other sausage cases are pending in various parts of the State. It is the full purpose of the dairy and food bureau to keep a constant lookout throughout the winter and have frequent investigations made of the quality of the sausage supply exposed to sale in every section of the Commonwealth.

Neither vegetable flour nor water are inimical to human health. The manufacturers of sausage who make use of flour and water to cheapen the cost of the products are simply common swindlers. They do not hurt the stomachs of their unsuspecting patrons; they simply make them pay for vegetable flour, which costs little, and for water, which costs nothing, in place of the sausage which they imagine they are getting.

The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania has made this sort of adulteration unlawful, acting upon the principle that the buyer has a right to the article he believes he is purchasing. If he pays the market price of a pound of sausage he is unquestionably legally entitled to a pound of genuine sausage. When he is given the sausage which has been cheapened and adulterated by the addition of cheap flour and cheaper water he is cheated and the State feels itself morally and legally bound to come to his defense and to punish the dealer who has sold him a counterfeit article. The Bulletin is quite certain that the people look favorably upon the sausage act and will heartily approve its rigid enforcement.

CONCERNING POLISHED RICE.

The Special Bulletin of the North Dakota food department calls attention to the sinister fact that most of the rice sold throughout this country is polished. That is to say there has been added to the rice a ground material which is made to adhere by means of a small amount of glucose; the mineral used being the ground rock talcum.

The Bulletin goes on to remark that observation seems to make it clean that when persons live continuously upon a product of this character it becomes dangerous to health. It is shown that the disease beriberi has some connection with the eating of polished rice and that this dread disease often makes its appearance among consumers of such rice. Experiments made and reported by the Public Health and Marine Hospital Service indicate that polished rice will have to disappear from the markets of the United States if the health of the people is to be preserved.

Dr. Frazier fed chickens on polished rice and between the sixtieth and the seventieth day beriberi appeared among them. Those fed on polished rice began to die, while those fed on the unpolished article continued to thrive. Other experiments of a similar character were followed by similar results.

Again an opportunity for observation occured in a country in which beriberi had not previously existed. Two hundred and fifty laborers were fed upon rice, one-half being given polished rice, the other half unpolished rice. On the sixtieth day a case of beriberi appeared among the laborers who had been eating polished rice. It is also stated that public institutions which have discontinued the use of polished rice are no more troubled by beriberi.

PROSECUTIONS ORDERED IN NOVEMBER.

During the month of November, Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust directed the institution of ninety-seven prosecutions for various transgressions against the pure food laws of the commonwealth. The candy cases led the procession, there being no less than thirty-one of them, all but two for covering the product with a resinous glaze, a practice prohibited by Rule No. 14. The articles examined embraced chocolate mints covered with cereal flour, bonbons containing coal tar color and sugar peanuts, sugar coated almonds, burnt almonds, chocolate brownies, chocolate fudge and plain fudge, all covered with a resinous glaze. Twenty-one of the samples were fudge.

Under the new sausage law there were seventeen prosecutions during the month. The violations of law occurred in Blair, Cambria, Clinton, Huntingdon, Luzerne, McKean, Venango and Warren counties. Fourteen of these samples contained vegetable flour and water; the others contained vegetable flour alone. It was precisely to meet this sort of petty rascality that the sausage act was made into law and it has already accomplished wonders in the direction of reform. There is every intention to enforce it relentlessly and impartially for those who practice what it prohibits are guilty of petty swindling, selling, as they do, a product that does not come up to the claims made for it in food value.

Samples of milk and cream taken in Bucks, Chester, Lancaster, Perry and York counties, fifteen in number, were found to be lacking, under the provisions of the law and prosecutions were ordered. Of these samples two consisted of watered milk, two were milk low in fat and watered, three were milk low in solids and watered, while eight consisted of cream low in fat.

Eleven samples of vinegar collected in Allegheny, Lawrence and Westmoreland counties were found to be so adulterated as to subject their venders to prosecution. These consisted of cider vinegar distilled and colored, cider vinegar low in acetic acid and ash, an imitation, cider vinegar watered and not made wholly from apples. Of the latter there were six samples. Pennsylvania has an admirable vinegar law. It was enacted by the Legislature several years ago for the purpose of encouraging the farmers of the State to manufacture vinegar. If farmers and dealers were to come to an understanding the counterfeit article would not be so abundant in this Commonwealth.

Violations of the State pure food law were noted in Allegheny, Beaver, Berks, Cambria, Fayette, Lawrence, Luzerne, Lackawanna, Huntingdon, Schuylkill, Washington and Westmoreland counties. These embraced a variety of articles. There was one sample of breakfast food that was found to be wormy and moth eaten; tLere was a sample of hominy grits inhabited by weevil and worms; samples of English walnuts and chestnuts were found to be filthy and decomposed. Some apple and fruit jellies were misbranded. Two samples of flour had been bleached with nitrous oxide. Some dried apricots had been bleached with sulphur dioxide, while three samples of tomato catsup were found to contain more than one-tenth of one per cent of benzoate of soda.

One violation of the law prohibiting the sale of oleomargarine colored so as to imitate yellow butter was found in Lackawanna county. From the same county and the adjoining one of Luzerne, came cream soda, root beer, orange cider, birch beer, all containing saccharin, a coal tar product many times sweeter than sugar, the use of which is contrary to the Act of Assembly regulating the manufacture and sale of non-alcoholic beverages Many dealers and manufacturers are tempted to use saccharin because a little of it will go so far, making it very much cheaper than sugar. It is a poison, however, and its use is forbidden in this Commonwealth.

COAL-TAR DYES IN FOOD FRAUDULENT, SAYS EXPERT.

Chemist Declares Artificial Coloring is Used to Make Goods Look Better Than They Are.

From Philadelphia North American, Dec. 22, 1911.

The general principal that coal-tar colors in almost every article of food are not necessary, are put there with fraudulent intent and should not be tolerated by the housekeeper was outlined by Prof. Charles H. La Wall, chemist for the State Dairy and Food Commission, in an address at the Wagner Institute.

Whether coal-tar dyes are injurious or not was not the question in point, he said. "The crux of the entire matter is simply this: In every instance the use of artificial coloring is unnecessary in an article of food, except to make the substance appear better than it really is, and thus enable it to compete with a better made article.

"Coal-tar colors have a legitimate and an illegitimate use," he said. "Their legitimate use is in such articles as are not capable of deception or fraud, such as candies. In other products, however, such as bread, butter, wine and so on, its use should be prohibited by law."

A sample piece of cake, colored a beautiful golden yellow, was shown by the professor. "This piece of cake is colored with coal-tar dye," he said. "In this particular instance the presence of the dye was not declared on a label, and was, therefore, illegal. It was used instead of egg. The use of color in cake in most instances is merely to enable the maker to do without eggs, which are the most expensive ingredient of cake. Indeed, the number of egg colors and substitutes advertised, and sometimes sold to householders, and said to be nutritous, show the reason for their use. They are cheaper, far cheaper, than eggs.

"A year and a half ago one of the largest bakers in this city used coal-tar dyes in cakes. Since the passage of the pure food and drug act, he has stopped coloring his cake. Now, that man merely colored his cake to avoid the use of eggs. Many smaller bakers in this city still use coal-tar dye for cake. Agent Cassidy, of the Dairy and Food Department, catches them at it almost daily.

Mustard Made From Flour.

"Take noodles, for instance. Here are some made in this city. They contain no eggs at all, but are colored a bright golden yellow. Though rich in color, they have no food value. Even were the package marked 'artificially colored,' the householder, in buying the noodles, will be cheated, for she will get noodles without any nutriment in them at all.

"Here is some mustard made from wheat flour, colored with coal-tar dye and flavored with a little real mustard.

"The entire point of the thing is this—while the law permits such artificial coloration when the label is so marked, I do not think it should be allowed by law, because people who buy foodstuffs are careless, the majority of them do not read the labels and often when they do, the mark 'artificially colored,' does not deter them from buying.

"This is the question the buyer should ask himself, 'Is this artificial coloring necessary? Have they not left out something from the composition of this article they want to conceal by the presence of this dye? Have they left the eggs out of the noodles, or the cake? If they have, I do not want that article."

"In ice cream it is not necessary for the dealer to declare the presence of color. Our ice cream act was framed by the ice cream men themselves, and the interpretation of the act makes it impossible for us to prosecute them under the existing law.

"Under the act, no coloring can be placed in the ice cream, if placed there for 'fraudulent purposes.' Now, under the ruling, if one berry is in a gallon of cream, the coloring is construed to have been placed there for coloring only, and not as a substitute for real strawberries. It is impossible to make ice cream from berries, and have it so brightly colored as the strawberry cream sold. Coal-tar colors should not be permitted in ice cream. Where color is used, remember, the underlying principle is one of fraud.

"Now in the case of colored candy, there is no deception. Color in candy pleases the eye, gives variety. In such an article as grape juice, for instance, however, it should not be permitted."

How to Detect Dyes.

The detection of coal-tar dyes was then explained by the lecturer.

"In brief," he said, "if any fluid in which pure woolen goods is soaked dyes that piece of goods, the liquid contains coal-tar dye. Most coal-tar dye will not dye cotton, and vegetable colors will not give a pronounced dye to either.

"To make the test, put a few drops of vinegar in, say, the grape juice you are testing. Immerse a piece of woolen cloth. If that cloth is dyed a rich, deep color when you take it out, the grape juice is colored artificially and may not be grape juice at all."

Another test was made with the use of Fuller's earth. Doctor La Wall dyed water a bright yellow with saffron, a vegetable color. Indigo blue, a coal-tar dye, was poured in, and the resultant color was green. Fuller's earth was added and the green water filtered.

Through selective action the vegetable color, which adhered to the earth, remained in the filter, and the original coal-tar dye, indigo blue, dripped through. In other words, the coal-tar dye comes out unmodified, while the Fuller's earth always holds the vegetable coloring. Had the water been colored with vegetable color only, the water would have filtered out colorless.

CIDER VINEGAR.

Owing to misstatements made by many traveling salesmen to the effect that cider vinegar made on the farm does not comply with the Pennsylvania vinegar law, Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust announces that cider vinegar made from the pure apple juice and containing no added water, drugs or acids, will comply with the law. That is, provided each barrel or cask is properly branded. This branding can be done with a stencil or by taking cards and labeling each card: "PURE CIDER VINEGAR," giving the producer's name, together with his postoffice address and attaching said card to each barrel or cask. If made and sold in the way indicated above, true cider vinegar can be handled by the farmer and merchant without fear of any interference under our vinegar law.

The Legislature of 1901 so amended the Pennsylvania vinegar law as to permit the farmer to use up his surplus of apples by converting it into cider vinegar. Therefore the Commissioner feels that the present statement is necessary so as to permit the consuming public, who wishes to secure good old-fashioned, farm-made cider vinegar, to obtain the same; and at the same time to enlighten the farmer and merchant to the effect that they can, with safety, dispose of cider vinegar made and labeled in the way indicated above. Our present vinegar law sets up no standards as to acidity and solids, requiring only that cider vinegar shall be made from pure apple juice.

THE BANNER YEAR.

It is now pretty evident that the year 1911 will be the banner year in the history of the Dairy and Food Bureau of Pennsylvania. The figures have not yet been tabulated but certain things are already quite apparent.

For one thing, more prosecutions have been instituted for violations of law during the year than in any previous year since the creation of the Bureau. This activity in the legal branch of the work is largely due to the recent legislation signed by Governor Tener and dealing with the adulteration of milk and sausage. The results have already tended to the clarification of the situation in the interest of the consuming public.

The preliminary annual report of Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust will show that in the neighborhood of 500 prosecutions under the milk act have been terminated. This fact shows the legislature did not act too soon. Milk is the most important article of human food. It is absolutely essential in the case of infants or invalids, and for that reason special efforts should be made to secure it in its purity. That is the intent of the State law. It sets no impossible standard; on the contrary the requirements concerning both milk and cream are very reasonable.

The sausage act has practically revolutionized the business of manufacturing all sorts of sausage in this Commonwealth. It has driven the drug store out of the slaughter house and has put an end to the vicious practice of adding cereal and water to the product. The result is that the lovers of sausage are getting what they pay for instead of a much adulterated and cheapened article. They are getting more real sausage and far less cereal and water than they received in former days and there is reason to suppose that a pound of sausage goes much farther now than in former times and that it produces a more agreeable sensation during the process of digestion.

Milkmen and butchers in every section of the State are showing their desire to comply with the provisions of the laws. While many prosecutions have been necessary it is quite clear from the rapid improvement in the quality of the milk now sold in the State that a strenuous effort has been made in many quarters to comply with the requirements of the new law. The same is true of the sausage makers. The majority are doing the square thing by their patrons, obeying the Golden Rule and making things easier for those servants of the State who are charged with the enforcement of the law.

There have been about 1,100 prosecutions during the year. The annual report will contain full details.

PROSECUTIONS FOR SELLING ADULTERATED VINEGAR.

Many instances of the sale of adulterated vinegar have recently been discovered in both the western and northeastern sections of the State. The adulteration discovered is of various kinds. In some cases, the stuff is simply vinegar diluted with water and sold to the consumer at vinegar price; in others, it is distilled vinegar, made cheaply from the distillate from fermented grain, diluted with water and given a dark, cider vinegar-like color; in still other cases, it is distilled vinegar mixed with cider vinegar; and a fourth kind consists of distilled vinegar given body by the addition of so-called 'apple jelly,' a dark substance made either by boiling down apple refuse from evaporating establishments, or the pressing from apple pomace, both of which raw-materials are often of doubtful sanitary quality.

Twenty cases of prosecution for offenses of this character have just been concluded, and thirty others are now pending in the sections named. It is the purpose of Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust to keep up a vigilant activity against this form of adulteration, until the evil is wiped out.

SULPHUROUS ACID IN DRIED FRUIT.

Five suits have been started in western counties by Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust against dealers who have sold evaporated peaches and apricots bleached and preserved by use of sulphur dioxide, without stating on the package, as the law requires, that the fruit contains this preservative.

When the Legislature, in response to the pleas on behalf of the producers of evaporated fruits, gave the qualified permission for their sale, provided they did not contain injurious quantities of that powerful substance, sulphur dioxide, it was not intended that the public should be induced to buy without knowledge fruits so preserved and bleached. Accordingly, there was coupled with the permission, the requirement that the presence of this chemical product should in all cases be made known to the buyer by plain declaration stamped on each package.

Dealers who ignore this reasonable requirement, deserve that the full penalty of the law be visited upon them, and it is the Commissioner's purpose to bring all persons found engaging in this evasion before the courts for judgment.

BUTTER VS. OLEO.

Under the foregoing title the Butter, Cheese and Egg Journal, the official organ of the Wisconsin Buttermakers Association and the Wisconsin Association of Creamery Owners and Managers, indulges in some remarks that may not be acceptable in the sight of all buttermakers, but which are worth examining. The fact that these statements are made by the official organ of the buttermakers of Wisconsin adds force to their opinions and suggestions: Here is what it says:

If you want the real situation with reference to oleo and butter, just step into a dozen or more grocery stores in any good sized city and note the relative demand for the two articles. It is dollars to doughnuts that you will be convinced that there is a large and active demand for oleo. We found that in stores handling the poorer grades of butter the demand was much in favor of oleo and that this demand decreased as the quality of the butter increased. But the general impression we carried away after many of these visits, was that in a large per cent. of the butter retailing establishments there was as much oleo sold as butter. And when the question was asked why there was such great call for oleo the answer usually was that consumers preferred it to common quality of creamery butter.

Now who can dispute that there is anything more unsatisfactory as an article of diet than poor butter? And there is little wonder that city people use oleo so largely. People will use anything as a substitute for poor butter. And surely there are mountains of poor butter. We have gone home after some of our little investigating trips thoroughly sick and discouraged at the vast amount of poor butter upon our markets.

Please remember this: Consumers prefer oleo to poor butter because the former tastes better to them. Can you blame them for buying what they consider the better product and especially when they can get this product at about half the price of poor butter?

We can call oleomargarine "artificial butter," "butterine," "indigestible," "unwholesome" and a thousand other things; so long as it tastes better to consumers than poor butter, consumers will buy it. There is practically only one weapon that can be successfully wielded against oleo and that is high quality in butter. And if things were as they should be, and as they can be, there would be only one grade of butter and that a good one. Just as long as we allow anything but a high class of butter to be made, just so long will we be surrendering territory to the oleo people.

Let us get back to the old plan of sending back to the farms any milk or cream that is not fit to manufacture into a good grade of butter.

Such are the views of a journal representing the butter trade. Their source adds to their weight. Yet butter manufacturers should remember the declaration which says: "Faithful are the wounds of a friend." That is to say the words of the friend who is willing to offend if the truth require it are worth attending to. This Bulletin has occasionally hinted that some buttermakers were aiding in the extension of the oleomargarine market by the quality of the butter they sent to market, but it has never been quite so plain in speech. Yet the householder knows that it is more or less of a problem to get fresh and wholesome butter and he understands that much of the responsibility for bad butter rests with the shippers of the cream from which the butter is made. We think the buttermakers of the country should be wise enough to perceive that every pound of bad butter put on the market helps the manufacturers and venders of oleomargarine to boost their wares.

BULLETIN ON TUBERCULOSIS.

Farmers' Bulletin 473, just issued by the federal department of agriculture, contains an important and comprehensive statement of facts about bovine tuberculosis. The bulletin deals with the history, nature, symptoms of the disease; how it spreads, how a herd is infected, the tuberculin test and its prevention and suppression.

"Tuberculosis," the bulletin states, "is a widespread disease, affecting animals and also men. Human beings and cattle are its chief victims, but there is no kind of animal that will not take it. Hogs and chickens are quite often affected; horses, sheep and goats being affected but seldom, however.

"The disease is contagious. It spreads from cow to cow in a herd until most of them are affected. It is slow in developing and may not become noticeable for months or even years. The tuberculin test, which cannot do harm to the healthy cow, reveals the germ in a few hours, and always proves successful when in the hands of an experienced veterinarian."

"The disease is common among hogs," the bulletin goes on. "The public abattoirs report that a serious percentage of hogs inspected is found to be tuberculous. The losses among cattle and hogs are enormous, amounting to millions of dollars annually."

Turning to the infection of human beings with the tuberculosis germ through cattle, the bulletin says: "Milk is the staple food of infants and young children and is usually taken in the raw state. If this milk is taken from a tuberculous cow it may contain millions of living tubercle germs. Young children fed on such milk often contract the disease, and it is a frequent cause of death among them." This positive statement may be true; most of us would prefer to take no risks; still, some authorities say it is not proven that tuberculous cattle can infect human beings.

"Meat from tuberculous cattle," continues the bulletin, "is not so likely to convey the infections for several reasons. It does not so frequently contain the germs, cooking destroys those that are present, and, lastly, meat is not consumed by very young children."

As to the spread of the disease the bulletin says: Sooner or later the tuberculous cow begins to give off the germs of the disease. The germs escape by the mouth and nose, the bowels, in the milk, and in discharges from the genital organs. When the germs are being given off in any of these ways the disease is known as open tuberculosis."

The conclusion of the bulletin is as follows: "Dark, dirty, crowded stables are favorable to tuberculosis. Under these conditions the disease spreads rapidly and is only kept out with difficulty. Clean, airy, well-lighted stables, on the other hand, are unfavorable to the development of the disease. If brought into such a stable it does not spread so rapidly and is not so difficult to get rid of as in the first case.

"A well-built, sanitary stable need not be made of expensive material or of elaborate design, but should have plenty of light, air and drainage. Light is very important. Direct sunlight is a great destroyer of germ life. Tubercle bacilli soon die if exposed to sunlight. It is a disinfectant always ready to work without cost."

Some folks might say that the foregoing abstract of the federal agricultural department's exposition of the subject of tuberculosis is more suitable for the pages of the bulletin of the State Health Department than for this publication, but we cannot have absolutely pure milk until we have perfectly healthy cows, and the more information the dairy farmers of the State receive the more effective is their sanitary work likely to be. Sometimes those who know all about it are bettered by the perusal of facts with which they are perfectly familiar but which they have temporarily forgotten or neglected. Most of us need admonition upon admonition, precept upon precept. And even they we are frequently very careless.

It is of the utmost importance that the milk sent into the families of this State should be pure. Proper knowledge and proper conduct by the dairymen in every section will greatly promote the safety of babes and prolong the life of the coming generations.

RESPONSIBILITY OF THE GROCER.

A somewhat singular case was tried in the Philadelphia courts not many weeks ago. A woman purchased from a local grocer a can of molasses labeled in this manner: "Molasses in this can being in condensed form, will not ferment."

The woman made the purchase more than six years ago, but the civil suit brought by her to recover damages for injuries inflicted when the can did burst has just been concluded. She swore that when she took the goods home and began to open the can it exploded with great violence, the tin top striking her in the face. Her spectacles were broken and some of the glass penetrated her eye, inflicting injuries which prevented her continuing to pursue her business of dressmaking.

The defendant contended that he sold the goods upon the representation of the label; as he had not manufactured the molasses he did not know what it contained and felt that the guarantor was certainly the manufacturer. It was held, however, that when a grocer sells a package of goods containing the positive statement that it will not ferment, he is responsible to the purchaser. This view was taken by the jury to a certain extent. The woman asked for damages to the amount of $20,000. She was awarded $75. The unfortunate grocer is looking to the manufacturer to reimburse him.

Referring to the foregoing case the Grocery World and General Merchant remarks that the grocer who sells package goods containing a positive guarantee is not morally responsible for the failure of the goods to keep the promise of the packer. It adds: "As to his legal responsibility, however, there would seem to be no question, for a dealer who sells goods the labels of which bear certain representations is clearly responsible for those representations because he has made his sale on the strength of them. Any other conclusion would compel the injured party to seek the packer out—in Ohio in this case—and at great expense and trouble pursue her action there. This would be prohibitive where the packer was in Europe or Africa."

"The grocer, however, is not helpless. To be sure, he was compelled to shoulder the burden of defending the action, together with the undesirable publicity connected with the case, but he has recourse against the packer, not only to recover the amount of the verdict he will be obliged to pay, but for his counsel fee and all other expenses to which he has been put, as well as damages for such loss of business and reputation as he can show he suffered.

HANDS AND FINGER NAILS.

Here is a pungent sentence which we find on the cover of a recent number of the Grocery World and General Merchant: "Clean hands and nails are a much better advertisement for a grocery store than a pure heart or the ability to make a good prayer." At first glance that may seem somewhat irreverent, but it's nothing of the sort. It is the expression of a truth that is being more and more acted upon by the purchasing public.

"Clean hands and nails are a much better advertisement for a grocery store than a pure heart or the ability to make a good prayer." The pure heart is a splendid possession. The ability to pray well is a gift to be cherished, provided the well-ordered words be the sincere expression of an honest heart. But they are not the important thing in the sale of food products. At the moment the purchaser is buying his goods he prefers to notice that the salesman has a knowledge of sanitary requirements and is trying to live up to it.

If there ever was a moment when the capable housekeeper ignored filthy and unsanitary conditions in the establishments she visited for the purchase of household necessities that time has passed. Personally, we believe grandmother was quite as careful as her descendant of the present day, although she may not have known as much about the dreadful things that lie in wait for human life. Those of you who remember her know that she was rather particular, her natural sense of cleanliness serving her well in lieu of the scientific knowledge supposed to be at the finger ends of her successors of the third generation.

However that may be, it is the present that concerns us. And it is a noticeable fact that the householders of the land are beginning to avoid the grocer who keeps a disreputable looking place of business and whose personal habits are the reverse of irreproachable. They have studied something about sanitation and they know that dirty finger nails and hands are dangerous because they may carry disease and death in their grasp. Most grocers are aware of this truth and are acting upon it. Those who continue to be careless will suddenly wake up to find their trade elsewhere. Twentieth century housekeepers are getting to be pretty particular.

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF RETAILERS

Another new organization was born recently in the city of Chicago. It was christened the National Federation of Retail Merchants and was created at the instance of the Retail Lumber Dealers' Association. It is said that 150 delegates, representing thirty-six states, attended the first meeting.

According to the Inland Grocer, the object of the organization is to safeguard and serve the interests of all retail merchants; to oppose all unjust legislation inimical to retail merchants; to promote just legislation designed for the benefit of retail merchants; to demonstrate the necessity of retail merchants to manufacturer, wholesalers and consumers of the United States; to co-operate with all other organizations having for their objects the advancement of the interests of commerce.

The officers are as follows: President, M J. Mahoney, Detroit, Michigan; Vice President, E. C. Robinson, St. Louis, Missouri; Treasrer, J. T. Russell, Chicago, Illinois; Secretary, J. R. Moorehead, Lexington, Missouri. The board of directors is to consist of one representative from each line of trade represented in the federation. This board is to elect an executive committee of seven members, including the president, vice president and treasurer.

Membership is defined as follows: "The membership shall be confined to retail merchants doing business in the United States who are affiliated with their state or interstate association, and where a national association exists, through their national association, and who are willing to conform to the constitution and by-laws of this organization, and such associate membership as may be provided for by the board of directors."

Some folks may not be able to understand why the National Association of Retail Grocers is not able to carry out all the purposes defined in the paragraph setting forth the reasons for the organization of this federation, but its promoters can doubtless clearly define the differences between the two and establish the perfect right of the new association to life and growth.

CONFECTIONERS' AND ICE CREAM ASSOCIATION.

The National Confectioners' and Ice Cream Manufacturers' Protective Association held its first annual convention in Philadelphia October 17-19, inclusive. The several sessions were devoted to the presentation of papers dealing with matters concerning their business of the delegates as well as seasonable discussions.

One of the opening talks was by Mr. Jerome Alexander who discussed the use and abuse of gelatine in ice cream.

Victor C. Goetz gave an address upon "The Application of Mechanical Refrigeration to the Retail Ice Cream Business, and Dr. B. K. Wilbur spoke on the "Cocoa Bean," adding to the interest of the discourse by beautiful lantern slides showing the various tropical countries in which the bean grows. Mr. Frank Tyson spoke on the use of brine freezer, with or without mechanical refrigeration.

The association did not at first put itself on record as opposed to any standard of butter-fat in ice cream, although all the members who spoke were on the negative side. The matter was referred to the executive committee for action. This body later on reported opposition to any standard of butter fat in ice cream.

The following officers were elected: President, Jacob Hartman; First Vice President, Charles Hoops; Second Vice President, Frank Joseph; Treasurer, George Meyer; Recording Secretary, F. C. H. Hesse; Corresponding Secretary, Charles Brush; Executive Committee, Charles Hoops, F. C. H. Hesse, Martin J. Hesch, L. Mehler, Charles Plump, Charles Mahnken, Otto Koral and J. Sisken.

THE NATIONAL DAIRY SHOW.

According to Hoard's Dairyman, which ought to be pretty good authority, the sixth annual meeting of the National Dairy Show Association, which was held in Chicago from October 26 to November 4, inclusive, was the largest and most complete dairy exposition ever held by the association. The machinery display, the cattle exhibit and educational features met more nearly the ideal than any of the previous shows.

Many associations representing the several states and having to do with dairy problems, took advantage of this meeting to hold local conventions. Among the distinguished visitors was President William H. Taft, who delivered a notable address, which was reported in the daily newspapers of the following day. The President congratulated the dairymen upon what they have accomplished already and suggested that there is still room for improvement in breeding and in feeding and in all the methods properly usable for an increase of the milk supply.

Hoard's Dairyman tells us that the magnitude and completeness of the dairy show pleased everybody that saw it. The machinery exhibitors spared no efforts in making an educational and attractive display of their wares. Machinery of all kinds for making butter and cheese, bottling and pasteurizing milk for city consumption, the washing and capping of bottles, refrigerators and refrigerating machinery and every conceivable apparatus for handling dairy products were on exhibition. A wonderful improvement in dairy apparatus has taken place since the first national dairy show. Probably the greatest improvement has been made in machinery uses in handling milk for city supply. The apparatus for bottling milk and capping the bottles and washing bottles has lessened the labor of bottling milk and made the work of preparing it for the market a pleasure rather than a bit of drudgery.

This exhibit and similar ones are to be commended because they promote the production and distribution of pure milk and other dairy products. The educational work they do is diffused all over the country and the health of children and adults conserved. For these reasons their increase should be encouraged and their promoters thanked.

POISONING THE CHILDREN.

The Wilkes-Barre Record, one of the ablest and most influential newspapers in the Commonwealth, indulges in the following remarks concerning a matter that has recently attracted the special attention of the Dairy and Food Bureau:

According to a statement issued by State Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust he has enlisted the interest and cooperation of federal government officials in his crusade against the manufacturers of adulterated and poisoned candy. Mr. Foust calls especial attention to the cheap candies covered with varnish and shellac. Dr. Wiley, federal chemist, writes Mr. Foust that in all the samples that have been presented to him "either the glaze itself contained indigestible material which must of necessity work injury, especially in the child's stomach, or it concealed some kind of inferiority, or it injuriously affected the quality and strength of the material, or permitted the goods to be held for a long time and sold with the appearance of freshness."

The promise of federal help is important. The pure food officers of Pennsylvania cannot go outside of their own jurisdiction. If adulterated stuff is sent from another state the culprits cannot be reached. In case the evidence is laid before the federal authorities they can lay their hands upon the manufacturer wherever he may be.

Varnish and shellac have their use in preserving and beautifying furniture, but not in a child's stomach. The little ones are attracted by the bright things in the confectioners' shops, and they choose the things that will give them the most for their pennies. The manufacturer who attempts to increase the popularity of his goods at the risk of inflaming the delicate digestive organs of the child, perhaps laying the foundation for chronic disease if not causing death, is guilty of a species of rascality that should be met with the severest penalties of the law. The children have a hard enough struggle battling with the afflictions to which they are subject. They should at least be spared from the menace to health and life that comes from the criminal greed of the poisoners and adulterators.

Mr. Foust's crusade should be pushed with all the vigor possible, though we very much question his judgment in letting it be known that he is about to canvass every county in the State for violations. Those who engage in the criminal business may prepare themselves for visits of the inspectors and replace the stocks when the agents have departed.

With all that is said by the Record concerning the character of the business which endangers the lives of children, the Bulletin fully agrees. It is the intention of the Dairy and Food Bureau to follow those who engage in such nefarious undertakings. It must be remembered, however, that the average retailer, purchasing his goods from the manufacturer, as he does, may plead that he was in ignorance concerning the effect of the coatings on confectionery and claim the right to return the forbidden stock to the manufacturer.

It is the duty of the Dairy and Food Bureau to warn all venders of coated candy that the practice must cease. It is not the purpose of the law that prosecutions shall be waged in a vindictive manner. If men will take warning and fall into line, obeying law and striving to assist the Dairy and Food Commissioner and his agents—that is all the law desires. It pursues and punishes those who wantonly refuse to be warned or enlightened and who persist in violating law for the sake of gain.

The Dairy and Food office seeks to promote obedience to the food laws of the State rather than engage in wholesale prosecution of grocers and confectioners. It endeavors to inform venders concerning the purport of the law; it seeks to lead them into the path of obedience. It has been eminently successful. While there has been a minimum of prosecutions there has been a growing regard for law among dealers and the Dairy and Food Commissioner feels very grateful to them for the generous support they have given to his efforts to promote the sale of pure food products.

In accordance with the custom of the Bureau, then, warnings have been issued in the hope that only the negligent or the perverse may be caught in the net cast by the state. As for the danger that dealers will hide their debased products while the agents of the Bureau are about, we do not think there is much in it. Those agents will never relax their vigilance and after the first warning no further word is given out. The agents of this Division are constantly purchasing samples of goods and submitting them to chemical analysis and the man who undertakes to disregard and disobey the rule prohibiting the sale of glazed candy is going to find it a very costly proceeding.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

The Feed Control officials of the United States held their third annual convention in Columbus, Ohio, November 17 and 18.

South Dakota's pure food and drug commissioner has issued a bulletin in which he informs the drug trade that the collection and analysis of over 700 drugs develops the fact that a great many of the drugs on sale in the state are adulterated or below the standard prescribed by law. He warns all druggists selling inferior goods after November 1, that they will be prosecuted.

The city of Berlin has gone into business as a wholesale food merchant. At present it is dealing exclusively in sea fish which are sold to retailers at a low price. This experiment has been undertaken on account of the rise in food prices in Berlin.

Report says that oysters grown this season are in good condition —well-grown, plumped out and properly flavored.

Minnesota food officials have been in consultation concerning the nature of the state's milk supply and there is reason to believe that a movement is about to be undertaken having for its object the production of cleaner milk in all parts of the state.

Nearly all cheese of the Chedder type made in the United States is paraffined before it reaches the public. The practice has been in vogue only about six years and was first used to improve the appearance of the cheese. It was soon discovered that the paraffine also prevented the loss of weight, and when that fact was bruited abroad it was soon generally employed.

Persons who are fond of olives will be pleased to hear through the American consul at Seville, that the Spanish olive crop promises to be exceptionally fine this season.

For the purpose of securing practical co-operation among dealers in teas and coffees on matters affecting the welfare of the trade, as well as to promote sociability, the National Tea and Coffee Trade Association was organized at a meeting recently held in New York City.

The state food commissioner of Texas has been conducting a campaign for the purpose of cleaning out or abolishing unsanitary slaughter houses and butcher shops in the rural districts of that big state.

In the course of its investigations in the egg business the New York department of health came across three and one-half cans of liquid eggs with partially hatched chickens. Several persons conducting bakeshops at which rotten eggs were used were arrested.

The Supreme Court of Kansas has just decided that creamery men and dealers must sell sixteen ounces to a pound in every pound of butter sold in that state. Elaborate experiments were made by the state, extending over a period of one year. The results satisfied the court that butter properly packed can be kept in cold storage for an indefinite period without losing weight.

The federal court sitting at Trenton, New Jersey, recently made a ruling exempting from the terms of the federal meat inspection law retail butchers delivering goods to their local customers, even though the delivery might be interstate.

It is said that Indiana apple growers are about to organize a league for the purpose of opening a wholesale house in Indianapolis. They claim that they are unable to make satisfactory arrangements with the commission men of that city.

The Indianapolis correspondent of the American Food Journal says the state board of health of Indiana has undertaken to teach the housewives of the state to use cold storage eggs during the fall months, rather than buy the eggs sold as country eggs, which come from six to ten cents a dozen higher than the storage eggs. What success they met with during the autumn of 1911 is not known.

According to Dr. Wiley, "If a country treats its women right, eats more sugar per head and consumes more soap per head than any other country, then it is the greatest country." That's what he told the ladies.

Something of a calamity has befallen Germany this season. The cabbage crop was short and the supply of sauer kraut is necessarily limited. The year's product is being kept at home.

Pearson's Magazine which in its February number charged that some canners used sulphur to bleach old yellow corn white and saccharin to give it a sweet taste, admits in its November number that such a practice does not now exist. It makes a full retraction, creditable to itself and satisfactory to the canners.

Six tons of American tea were grown on the government's experimental farm in South Carolina this year. According to the Department of Agriculture officials, this tea was sold to retailers throughout the country, but chiefly in the south, several of whom have developed quite a trade in American tea.

There are so many fraudulent vinegars on the market that the government at Washington has determined to make a strenuous effort to put an end to the counterfeiting of this standard article of household use.

The annual meeting of the American Dairy Cattle Congress was held in Chicago on the last day of October. It seems to have been an interesting and profitable session. The president of this association is General Charles W. Wood, of Worcester, Mass. The secretary is Charles F. Mills, of Springfield, Illinois, while the funds are conserved by R. B. Swift, of Libertyville, in the same state.

Hoard's Dairyman declares that while beet pulp cannot be considered exactly a substitute for hay, yet when the latter is scarce the former can be fed in moderate amounts and will take the place of a considerable amount of hay. It adds that farmers, as a rule, feed much more hay than is profitable.

The men who put poor butter on the market are the most effective agents of the manufacturers of artificial butter.

Some energetic housewives in New York city have organized a league, the chief purpose of which is to post the members in the actual price of goods and to see that the shops of their grocers are clean. It promises to be a popular organization and is likely to have many branches in other parts of the country.

The health department at Washington has been doing its share of the educational work required to break up the practice of certain grocers in maintaining filthy and unsanitary stores. They have a record of fourteen prosecutions for this offense within three days.

The grocers of Wichita, Kansas, have begun to sell bananas by weight. They plan to charge enough to give them a profit of two cents a pound over wholesale rates.

The Grocers' Magazine, of Boston, says that "while the demand for unpolished rice is gradually increasing, most of the rice sold is still the polished variety." So far as Pennsylvania is concerned the sale of the polished article is contrary to law. The vender who forgets this is liable to get into trouble.

Nebraska millers who do not correctly brand the net weight of flour sold in sacks are being prosecuted. Allowance is made for variation in weight after being stocked in retail stores, but not when fresh at the mill.

Iowa has a new egg law that is very sweeping in its provisions. The grocers are sending circulars to the farmers who sell eggs calling their attention to the rigid requirements of the act and urging them to gather eggs every day.

Report says that Great Britain is making a demand for Maine's surplus potato crop, the British yield being far below normal.

It is said that six freshly baked pies were placed in the corner stone of a domestic science building in course of erection in Cincinnati. The concern that made the pies will occupy the building.

Incidentally it may be remarked that the authorities of New Jersey recently seized 10,000 bad eggs. They had been in cold storage in Jersey City. In justice to the owner it must be said that he claimed the eggs were held for the use of tanners and not for food.

A Nova Scotia grocer has very decidedly increased his trade by serving free tea to his customers every afternoon.

The pure food authorities of Nebraska recently seized and destroyed 3,000 gallons of catsup shipped to an Omaha wholesale firm by a Toledo, Ohio, concern.

Eggs have a shell to protect their contents, but in spite of that they will take on contamination if kept near decaying fruit or vegetables.

The dairy school is an institution the practical value of which is coming more and more into recognition as the days pass. The successful dairyman of the immediate future will be a graduate from such a school.

Inspectors of the state board of health in New Jersey report that seme of the canning factories are mixing bad fruits and vegetables with good products and canning them all together. An inquiry is to follow.

Official figures show that the year's catch of Norway and Irish mackerel was very short, not equaling half last year's catch.

The Butter, Cheese and Egg Journal takes the floor to observe—"The age of the cream spoils far more butter than dirty separators."

According to the Detroit News, internal revenue officials announce that more than twenty creameries whose product is marketed in Detroit have been called on to pay the government tax for manufacturing adulterated butter.

Under the dairy laws of Connectict the minimum of butter fat in milk is made 3.25 per cent. and in cream 16 per cent. Pasteurized milk must be so labeled, with the date of pasteurization, and all print butter must be stamped with the net weight of the butter in plain gothic type, not less than one-half inch in height. Renovated butter and oleomargarine must be properly labeled and signs placed in stores and restaurants and on delivery wagons.

It is said that the people of Siberia often buy their milk frozen and for convenience it is allowed to freeze about a stick which forms a handle to carry it by. The children, instead of crying out for a drink of milk ask for a bite of milk. But it comes to the same thing in the end.

THE FOOD PROBLEMS.

An Address Before the Civic Club of Chambersburg, Pa.

BY DR. WILLIAM FREAR.

Madam President, Members of the Civic Club, Ladies and Gentlemen:

At your request, the Dairy and Food Commissioner has delegated me to address you, this afternoon, upon the important subject of Pure Food.

It gives me personal pleasure to be permitted to address so live an organization upon a topic so vital to the home.

Three food problems to-day present themselves to the American family.

1st. To get food at reasonable price.

2nd. To get food suited in kind and preparation to the life-needs of the individual consumer.

3rd. To get the food for which they ask..

The first question has relation to the business organization of food production and distribution, and to food prices as an element in the cost of living.

The second, to the wise selection, combination and preparation of foods so that they shall effectually and unwastefully meet the body requirements—nutritive and dietetic—of the young and old, active and sedentary, healthy and invalid members of the family.

The third, to the securing of foods true to name; free, that is, from unannounced defects in quality, from substitution, and from injurious additions and uncleanliness.

All of these questions are important to every citizen of the land, since all must profit from the proper adaptation of their foods to their individual physiological needs, and all are, to some extent, purchasers of food supplies.

It is, however, solely to the Pure Food problem that I desire to limit attention this afternoon.

The home was until recently the place where foods were chiefly prepared. From the garret rafters hung bunches of onions and herbs, of smoked flitch, bacon and hams; in the cellar were stored for the winter, bins of potatoes and turnips, barrels of apples, earth-covered heaps of blanching celery, while from the hanging shelf smiled the round faces of the pumpkin, the plump sides of the apple-butter and pickle jars and inviting rows of jellies and preserves. Behind each house stood the pig-pen, its inhabitants little dreaming of butchering days and the crow of the rooster and the cackle of his mates served as well as our modern alarm clocks to herald the birth of a new day. The wines were home-made, save the rare sherry and port; the decanter was refilled from a barrel held to age for several years, after it was brought from the little near-by distillery; the family cider-barrel lay side-by-side with the vinegar barrel. Fresh meat was rare, even when "well done." When a man had a killing, his neighbors came in for a part. Centre county treasures the tradition that one of its learned judges, upon being refused a part of a quarter secured by the inn-keeper, who said he needed it for his court-week guests, thereupon arbitrarily postponed the date of the court, that the inn-keeper might have cause to regret his refusal to share with the august official his savory prize.

The coming of the factory has changed much of that. Miladi toils, perhaps, as much as her grandmother did, and without servants to help her; but she does not spin, nor does she stock her larder as did her grandmother. She comes from a journey to a house foodless, it may be; a few rings of the telephone, like so many rubs of Aladdin's old brass lamp, bring genii to her door. The baker's lad brings bread baked from flour milled in Minneapolis from wheat grown in North Dakota, or Nebraska; a juicy cut from a Texas steer, fattened in Missouri, killed in Chicago, and shipped in iced cars to Chambersburg, together with cold storage pullets from Swift's storage may come with the butcher's big boy; the grocer's man brings eggs from Armour's in Chicago, breakfast food from Battle Creek, crackers from the National Biscuit Company, butter from Elgin, or perhaps oleo from a near-by place, condensed milk from New York, catsup from Heinz, lettuce from Florida, potatoes from the Bermudas, fruit from Oregon and California, and mints from Huyler's and possibly Mocha from Brazil, with olive oil from Georgia.

This condition has its undoubted advantages, though it has in part increased the money cost of living. It has also its disadvantages. The factory-man and the factory-girl have taken upon themselves many of the labors of the housewife, but alas, they have too often forgotten that with every opportunity for service goes the responsibility of serving well. It has seemed to them instead that with the opportunity of serving a customer goes merely the opportunity of doing him well; and the modern food factory has made much of this latter opportunity and condoned its offences against humanity by the excuse of the rules of the business game—which have no common blood with the Golden Rule— and by publishing in capital letters its achievements of cheapening preparation by machine devices, by operative skill, by chemical invention, and by the diminishing of waste; of increasing the available variety of foods, and of presenting them in most attractive form—all 'for a consideration,' to quote the old miser, in Scott's 'Sir Nigel.'

I will not weary you with lists of the adulterations, misbrandings, and unsanitary conditions of some factory food production and sale. For ten years you have read them in your daily papers, and you will doubtless have been impressed with the fact that these evil practices are widespread. I am going to assume that you recognize fully this basic fact and the need for the correction of these evils.

I do not propose the reactionary but visionary scheme of returning to the old conditions of home production. The factory has come to stay. We simply need to see that it serves well from a full sense of its responsibilities.

Do not blame the factory man too much. We must go ahead, understandingly. He simply does on a larger scale, with higher skill and greater resource what the individual did before him and made traditional. The man who sells you adulterated spices under a false label, says that he must do so or go to the wall, because you will buy from his equally guilty competitors if he asks from you a higher price for his genuine wares. 'Is this true?' The oleo man tells me you would rather buy 'oleo' that looks like butter, than to have the article with its normal color. Is this true? The store-keeper says you never look at his labels, any way, so what's the use of his telling the truth on the label. Is this true?

I find three classes of men in the food business. The first says, "That is right" and "I will do it because it is right," or else he says, "Honesty is the best policy" and then advertises his policy. The second says, "This is right, I know," but adds with a blush of shame, "I dare not do it, for honesty to my customers spells failure in business." The third quotes with a jeer the unblushing Wall street maxim, which I beg your pardon for presenting in the usual crude form, "a sucker is born every minute and none ever dies." This third man claims the privilege of injuring your body and violating all your traditions of cleanliness, if it be profitable to him. The second man follows suit, but makes the excuses that his customer does other things just as injurious to his own health, or that his customer is so full of prejudices that the maker or dealer is forced to lie to him, or at best to permit him in his ignorance to believe what is not true.

The factory man somehow applies to his factory the sturdy old English saying the "every man's home is his castle," and often cries with Patrick Henry, "Give me liberty or give me death," when it is proposed, for the public good, that his place of fabrication be inspected.

Then, too, he recalls with indignant righteousness that old legal phrase, "caveat emptor," let the buyer beware, and trust to his individual wariness alone for his health and his wealth. But let this self-same appellant to a moss-grown legal adage, handed down from the age of simple barter, receive over his counter a leaden quarter or a fraudulent dollar bill, and then smile and be sad at his real human nature as he appeals for the punishment of the counterfeiter—who gave him a bad coin for his short-weight, imitation food. Another position very tenaciously clung to by many food manufacturers, is that the trade usage concerning the meaning of food names shall be accepted, the term "trade" including in this case, solely the manufacturer and middleman, but not the consumer. "The consumer," they contemptuously exclaim, "what does he know about such things?" "To compel us to limit our products to the ingredients and processes he thinks of when a given name is mentioned, is to set civilization backward, to deprive us of established rights, to arrest all future progress, and to greatly diminish food variety."

But this means that the consumer, because he has, in the past, been deceived, shall for that reason be forever deprived of the right to guard himself against further deception. The argument of the trade does not exhaust the practicable alternatives, because there remains the method of having as many different names for things as there are differences in products worth taking into account. The adoption of the latter alternative requires, it is true, more knowledge on the part of the consumer, but no more than is needful to an intelligent choice between the food varieties on the market; and it offers no real obstacle to progress in any desirable direction.

The problem we confront is ethical. Successful solution demands first a clear understanding of the problem. Upon the mother who prepares the family food rests much of the responsibility for the health of her husband and children, as well as her own.

The greater the number of persons served by the factory, the greater its responsibility. We limit the guardian, the savings bank, and the insurance company to investments in real securities that the principal of the orphan, the laborer, and the widow may be safe. Why should we not limit the food manufacturer to conditions, materials, processes and names that will ensure the health of the customer and the morality of the clerk?

What have we already done to meet the problem? Well, we have passed laws—good laws, but not perfect laws; perfect laws will not come until you ask for them and refuse to take "NO" for the answer to your demand.

We have sworn to enforce these laws; but we are powerless unless you keep public opinion insistently and encouragingly behind us, and behind your courts, your district attorneys, your juries, and your public press.

A law without public opinion is worse than a dead letter. It is a blind folly. John Morley recently said "a democratic government is a government by opinion."

To be effective, the law must represent the public ideal. It is your power and your responsibility, women of America, to form the public ideal on this food question.

OLEOMARGARINE AND THE TEN CENT TAX.

"The Farmer, editorially, well says when speaking of the coming fight in Congress this year in reference to the reduction of a ten-cent tax on colored oleomargarine:

"Already the magazines and newspapers are filled with advertisements and reading notices designed for the attention of the working men and the city men, which tell of the high cost of butterfat and how taxed oleo is unjust when it will take the place of butter. No mention is made of the fact that uncolored oleomargarine, which must sell for what it really is, is taxed only one-fourth cent a pound."

The manufacturers of oleomargarine desire to color their product yellow so that it can be sold as butter. They know it is easier to counterfeit with yellow oleomargarine than it is with the white product. Consumers know that butter, during a large portion of the season, is yellow, and yellow has become the trade mark of butter. It is unfair for manufacturers and dealers in oleomargarine to sell it as butter and at butter prices. When it is colored yellow it gives them an opportunity to do this and fool the consumer. Since the passage of the Grout law, which taxed artificially colored oleomargarine ten cents per pound, the poor man—and the packers and manufacturers and dealers of oleo have a great sympathy for this man—has been able to purchase oleomargarine at oleomargarine prices. When it is colored yellow in semblance of yellow butter, it is sold by the moonshiners in oleomargarine as butter and within two or three cents a pound as much as butter which grades extra and brings the highest price in market. During the last few years good oleomargarine has sold for eighteen and twenty cents a pound. The man who could not afford to eat butter has had an opportunity to purchase oleomargarine at oleomargarine prices. Before this, the product was permitted to be colored yellow, or at least taxed no heavier than the uncolored, much of which sold as butter and for very nearly as much. Where did the saving to the poor man come in?

"The manufacturers of butter and the dairymen of this country have no fear of oleomargarine as a competitive product, but when it is permitted to be sold as a counterfeit, competition ceases. What the dairy interests ask for, is that oleomargarine stand on its own merits, sell for what it is, be what it is, and not try to wear the garments of butter."—From Hoard's Dairyman, January 12, 1912.

PROSECUTIONS ORDERED IN DECEMBER.

During the month of December 127 prosecutions were ordered by Dairy and Food Commisisoner Foust. Twenty of these were for violations of the act forbidding the adulteration of non-alcoholic drinks. The violations of law occurred in Allegheny, Clearfield, Philadelphia and Lackawanna counties. In seventeen of these cases, including orange phosphate, ginger ale, orange cider, strawberry soda, raspberry soda, lemon soda, plain soda and birch beer, the violation of law consisted in sweetening the product with saccharin, a substance the use of which is forbidden in this Commonwealth. Unscrupulous manufacturers are tempted to use it for the reason that it is five hundred times sweeter than sugar and is correspondingly cheaper. The other adulterated drink consisted of a substance styled "strawberry pop," which was artificially colored and flavored and contained no strawberry, and sweet cider which contained benzoic acid.

The facts and figures contained in the foregoing paragraph show the necessity that existed for the passage of the act forbidding the adulteration of non-alcoholic drinks. These beverages are used very largely by children and young people, especially during the heated season. Before the enactment of the law the situation was very much worse than it is now. Analysis of the contents of the cheap drinks sold in the poorer quarters of the large cities showed that they had been extensively and dangerously adulterated. In some cases the acid constituted so large a proportion of the entire contents as to make the drink an immediate peril to the lives of the unsuspecting consumers. There has been a change for the better, but the fact that four counties of the State furnished twenty known cases of violation of this law during the month of December—not a specially favorable month for the sale of such beverages—shows that there are some venders doing business who think more of their own selfish advantage than they do of the health of their patrons and victims.

The next highest number of prosecutions ordered during December concerned violations of the milk and cream act, which became a law at the last session of the legislature. There were thirteen of these cases. Two consisted of milk low in fat and solids; four were samples of milk which was low in fats and solids and had been watered; seven were of cream low in fat. These violations of law occurred in the counties of Columbia, Dauphin, McKean and York. Those dealers who sold the milk and cream which were low in fat and solids might possibly plead ignorance of the fact that their products failed to come up to the legal standard, although it was their duty to know and such a plea would not be permitted in any court of law. But the persons who watered their milk before selling had no excuse that would justify their action, even to themselves. For while water is a harmless beverage when it is pure, it adulterates and weakens milk, reducing its quality and thus injuring the consumer, who, in a majority of cases, is a helpless infant. The legislature did a wise and beneficient act when it placed this law upon the statute books and it is the aim of the pure food bureau to enforce it with the utmost rigor.

Allegheny, Butler, Cambria, Indiana and Westmoreland counties furnished eleven cases of violations of the vinegar act. Of these one sample was found to consist of apple vinegar not made wholly from apples and watered; one consisted of cider vinegar not made wholly from apples; there was one of cider vinegar not made wholly from apples and watered; another sample was not made wholly from apples, was watered, and was also low in solids, ash and acidity; there were two samples of cider vinegar not made wholly from apples, watered and high in reducing sugars; there were two of cider vinegar distilled and colored with caramel; three samples of "cider" vinegar proved to be imitations, low in solids and acidity. The foregoing furnishes ample evidence that the adulteration of vinegar constitutes a favorite practice with those who are anxious to furnish their patrons with a low-priced article. Pennsylvania has carefully provided for the encouragement of the manufacture of pure cider vinegar by the farmers of the State. The grocers of the State should make an effort to co-operate with the farmers in the manufacture and sale of genuine cider vinegar.

Seven prosecutions were ordered for violation of the oleomargarine law. The offenses were committed in Allegheny, Berks, Schuylkill and Westmoreland counties, five of the offenses consisted in selling colored oleo; one vender had no license and one sold oleo for butter. Cambria, Northampton, Tioga and Warren counties furnished five offenses against the sausage act. In one instance the sausage had been preserved with sulphuric acid; in one case it had been adulterated with vegetable flour and water; in the other cases vegetable flour alone had been mixed with the meat. Philadelphia furnished three samples of rotten eggs and one sample of strawberry syrup containing saccharin.

Under the general food law of the State sixty-seven prosecutions were ordered. The samples which failed to measure up to the standard prescribed by the law were collected in Allegheny, Beaver, Butler, Berks, Carbon, Chester, Indiana, Lackawanna, Lawrence, Lebanon, Lehigh, Luzerne, Northampton, Northumberland, Schuylkill, Washington, Westmoreland, Philadelphia, Cambria, Centre, Clarion, Clearfield, Huntingdon and Lycoming counties. The goods purchased and examined consisted of English walnuts which were filthy and decomposed; dried peas unfit for food; dried peaches and dried apricots containing sulphur dioxide; Ralston breakfast food and mother's crushed oats infested with weevil; fresh oysters containing added water; tomato catsup containing more than one-tenth of one per cent. of sodium benzoate; sugar syrup sweetened with saccharin. A glance over this list will surely prove interesting to the general reader. And it likewise teaches the necessity of continued caution in the purchase of food products.

Special attention was paid to the quality of the cheap candy on sale in the State. Among the samples found to lack the purity required by law the following may be mentioned: jelly beans covered with a mineral substance; Lulu bars containing corn starch and coated with a resinous glaze; cocoanut caramels adulterated with a starchy matter foreign to cocoanut; candied cherries containing sulphur dioxide; licorice gum containing no licorice; sugar coated licorice, artificially colored and flavored with anise and carbon black; sweet chocolate containing cereal flour; chocolate balls containing cornstarch and coal tar dye; chocolate mints containing no chocolate, a sugar colored brown substitute; chocolate bonbons artifically colored and containing no chocolate; vanilla and chocolate fudge not made from chocolate; chocolate fudge artificially colored and coated with a resinous glaze; chocolate fudge containing cereal; samples of toasted cherries, chocolate candy, chocolate fudge, chocolate and vanilla fudge, cream fudge, plain fudge, candy peanuts, burnt almonds and roasted almonds, all coated with a resinous glaze.

VARIOUS METHODS OF ADMINISTRATION.

The student of the annual or quarterly reports of the various Dairy and Food Commissioners of the United States finds many things of great interest. He finds himself informed even by the tables of statistics, although they may not illuminated by comment or suggestion. The individuality of each official is shown by the manner and method of his reports. And in this sphere, as in the arena of human life, one seldom finds two who are of the same mind or who pursue similar methods.

Looking over the reports one discovers that the authors of some have used the greater part of the money appropriated for the conduct of their offices in paying for research work. Many investigations have been made. Analysis has been the chief feature of the year's work. Elaborate reports are printed and circulated for the information of the people, too often couched in language which is quite beyond the comprehension of the average citizen. The mass of information accumulated and scattered abroad is simply wonderful.

Now, information is quite essential to progress in any department of human endeavor. It is impossible for one to make the best progress if one continue ignorant of the things one ought to know. And in this era of enlightenment ignorance is a shame and a reproach. One ought to know about the things that pertain to one's physical peace because the means of information are so numerous and so accessible. The situation is very different to what it was in the days of our grandfathers. Knowledge was not then standing in every market place or traversing every highway calling aloud for disciples. She was much more remote. Her teachings were not for every one.

Yet there is some reason to believe that action serves a more useful purpose than theory in the administration of pure food laws. What do the people care about pages of description telling them precisely what the effect of certain preservatives or adulterants is, or what has been found to be wrong with certain food preparations if practical steps are not taken to cure the evils revealed by chemical investigation and analysis? It has been demonstrated that the enterprising individuals who make money by adulterating the food and drink of the people care nothing for analysis or for elaborate reports. The only thing that stays their malevolent energies is the apprehension that they are about to be prosecuted or their actual contact with the strong arm of the law.

The ideal food department is one which combines action with investigation. If the chemists who are employed to investigate the condition of food products or to determine the effect of certain chemical or other preservatives upon the human stomach find that many adulterated articles are being put upon the market, or that the preservatives used in some of those products conceal inferior goods or produce evil effects upon the human body, is it not the duty of the proper person or persons to institute proceedings against those who permit a greed for gain to overcome any conscientious scruples they may feel? And if this is done promptly, impartially and resolutely, is it not likely that the manufacturers and venders will find themselves counseled by motives of expediency to adopt other and less dangerous methods?

Not that wholesale prosecution should be instituted simply for the sake of prosecution. The practice in Pennsylvania is to issue timely and explicit warning concerning what is lawful and what unlawful. No effort in made to "catch" anybody who is not a chronic offender. Our laws have been framed with great care. Only the careless or the determinedly guilty are caught by them. After sufficient warning has been given, the agents of the bureau collect samples of various articles, some of which are suspected of adulteration from any section of the state. If the chemist who makes the examination reports that the articles analyzed have been manufactured in such a way as to violate the State law, prosecution is instituted in a sufficient number of cases and in various sections of the State to give ample warning that it is the intention of the Dairy and Food Commissioner to prosecute all offenders hereafter. By such means most of the impure or adulterated products have been driven out of this Commonwealth or are in process of disappearing. A method which has wrought such excellent results in Pennsylvania ought to be worth trying elsewhere. It is not egotism which prompts this statement but the consciousness of success.

IMPORTANT SUPREME COURT DECISION.

Discussing a recent important decision by the highest court in the land, the New York Sun says: The construction and interpretation of the Federal pure food and drug act of 1906 is a matter of general interest to manufacturer and consumer alike as well as a matter of particular interest to the officers entrusted with the enforcement of the law. Heretofore the lower courts have not agreed as to the effect of an important provision of the statute, namely that which prescribes a notice and hearing by the Department of Agriculture under certain circumstances. They have differed as to whether this provision conferred a right upon the defendant in cases of alleged violation of the law or simply imposed a duty upon the United States Attorney in the district where the violation was alleged to have occurred.

It is an offense against the pure food and drug act to misbrand food or medicine and send it from one state into another. To guard against such infringements of the statute the Department of Agriculture is authorized to collect specimens of suspected goods and cause them to be analyzed by the bureau of chemistry. If an article so examined is found to be adulterated the party from whom the sample has been obtained is to be notified and afforded an opportunity to be heard. If he proves to be a dealer having a guaranty from his vender that the article in question is pure, he is relieved from prosecution. In the absence of such a guaranty, proof of adulteration requires the Secretary of Agriculture to certify a copy of the analysis to the proper district attorney, whose duty it is without delay to institute appropriate legal proceedings by indictment or libel for the condemnation of the adulterated goods.

The question which has given rise to a conflict of opinion among the district and circuit judges has been whether notice and a preliminary hearing by the Department of Agriculture was a condition precedent to a prosecution. The courts in this city—the southern district of New York—have held that it is; while a contrary view has been entertained by the Federal courts in several of the Western states, and has now finally been declared to be correct by the Supreme Court of the United States.

The case in which this decision has just been rendered was one in which the misbranding consisted in selling Croton water as Imperial spring water. It contained some mineral salts in solution and was charged with carbonic acid gas. The prosecution was instituted by an inspector of the Department of Agriculture, but it did not appear that the department had given any such notice of hearing to the defendants as is provided for in the statute. For this reason the Circuit Court held that their conviction could not stand and granted a motion in arrest of judgment.

The new criminal appeal act permits the Government to take a case to the Supreme Court on such a question of law; the district attorney thereupon appealed to that tribunal. There his position has prevailed. The court, speaking through Mr. Justice Lamar, one of its new members, points out in the first place that the statute clearly contemplates the institution of proceedings to enforce its provisions through other agencies than the Department of Agriculture. Thus complaints of violations thereof may be made by State Health officials to the United States District Attorney who is authorized to prosecute at their instance where they present satisfactory evidence of such violations. Here the court finds distinct statutory recognition of the power of the district attorney to institute a prosecution under the pure food and drug act without any notice to the accused parties or affording them any opportunity to be heard. The necessary inference is that neither notice nor hearing is jurisdictional. Under the general provision found in the Revised Statutes of the United States, which makes it the duty of the district attorney to prosecute all delinquents for crimes and offenses cognizable under the authority of the United States, a district attorney may proceed against any one who has violated the pure food and drug act, at the instance of the Department of Agriculture or any one else, irrespective of any action by that Department or any prior notice to the accused party. "The statute contains no expression," says Mr. Justice Lamar, "indicating an intention to withdraw offenses under this act from the general powers of the grand jury."

The purpose of that portion of the statute which provides for the analysis of suspected samples and a hearing of those from whom they were obtained is evidently two fold: First, to protect those dealers who sell under a guaranty of purity from the original producers; and secondly, to compel action by the district attorney in all cases of adulteration established by actual investigation to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Agriculture. The effect of these various provisions considered together is to leave the public prosecutor at liberty to enforce the pure food and drug act just as he would any other criminal statute and upon like proof; but to oblige him to pursue all parties whose goods have been shown to be adulterated by the government analysis and who have not proved that they hold guaranties of purity from their vendors.

The conclusion of the Supreme Court, therefore, is that the statute establishes a rule of procedure relative to the duty of the Government prosecutors rather than a right to a preliminary notice and hearing in behalf of persons or corporations accused of having violated the pure food and drug act. The reasoning by which this result is reached is cogent and will commend itself to all who carefully study the opinion.

TEMPT NO MAN.

There is a general clamor among consumers for cheap goods. This originates in a variety of reasons. With the man of limited income and a big family economy is a matter of stern necessity. He is not the master of his own inclination. No matter what may be his private inclinations he is simply obliged to husband his resources in order that his dependent ones may not come to the extreme of want. There are many such heads of families in this country. Cheap food is a positive boon to them.

There are others, however, who are merely bargain hunters, to begin with. They have plenty, but the spirit of the miser has taken possession of them and they likewise go about seeking the cheapest market, the place where they can get the largest possible amount of food products for the least possible amount of money. It is a pity such a grasping spirit prevails among many who might set a worthier example to their neighbors and also incidentally encourage the grocer by buying his best, not his cheapest goods.

We are not advocating extravagance; we believe that economy is a virtue. But we beg all our friends to remember that the best food in the end is the cheapest. And it is surely a public duty to encourage those grocers who really try to get away from the cheapest possible products. You may be sure they need encouragement and liberal patronage.

FACTS FOR BUTTERMAKERS.

P. H. Kieffer, formerly assistant Dairy Commisioner of the State of Iowa, and a practical buttermaker of many years experience, in an address delivered at the Albert Lea convention of buttermakers gave it as his opinion that the manufacturers of butter should thoroughly understand the conditions of the market and that they should know how to secure the best material and manufacture the same in the best possible manner. He should also know the disadvantages that confront the merchant in handling the inferior product.

He said in part: You who are supplying the market with this much needed product want and need to know the factors that make the marketable value of butter. They are:

1. The package in which the butter is packed.
2. The texture and body of the butter.
3. Color and salting.

Last, but not least, the flavor of the butter.

You will note that I have mentioned the package first. At your end that might not seem so important, but stop to think: If the butter is packed in an inferior manner or a tub that has not been properly treated to prevent mould in these days when so much stress is placed upon attractive wrapings, what chance do you think butter stands when the buyer finds it in an inferior package or a tub that is mouldy? Fine packings make fine goods to the extent, at least, of having a buyer consent to examine the goods.

Should the butter be packed in an inferior package, or a tub that has not been properly treated to prevent mould, it very materially affects the selling value of the butter—to the extent of several cents a pound—the extent depending on the quality of the butter. Should the butter be of a high, uniform quality, the loss through mould would be greater than if the butter were of low grade, or, for instance on the packing stock order.

Considerable has been written by creamery and dairy papers, especially those papers published in the market centres regarding butter arriving in mouldy and inferior packages. The latter papers more fully realize the losses that occur on account of the opportunity they have of being on the market and witnessing the same. Every lot of butter that arrives on the market in mouldy tubs, causes more or less loss, according to their condition. One reason, probably, that the manufacturer does not give this matter the attention it deserves, is because he does not, as a rule, have to suffer all the loss. Competition is so strong, should the receiver permit all the loss to fall on the manufacturer, who in most cases is responsible, the manufacturer would become dissatisfied and change his shipments to some other house. Therefore, instead of calling on the man who is responsible for the condition, the man who sells the butter, in many instances stands the loss. Or should it go to the consumer, through some cause or other, the consumer would be the loser, and we certainly agree that he of all is an innocent party, entitled to all that his money will buy. I would like to devote my whole address to the matter of mould, feeling sure that if I could impress its importance on the manufacturer it would be the means of saving thousands and thousands of dollars. Ship your butter in nothing but the best tubs. Soak them in salt brine over night. Paraffining them is also beneficial. After filling the tub with butter, immediately pack it away in a cooling room at a temperature of 50 degrees, or below, until time of shipping. Then see that you have a good, well iced car to pack the butter in. Should you be situated at some distance from the railroad, you should insist that the railroad company furnish an iced box at the depot until the iced car arrives.

Butter arriving in a mouldy condition cannot be offered for sale as soon as it arrives at the store, unless it be offered at a serious loss in price. In the summer, it has been placed in an ice box over night so that it will become hard. It is taken out of the box the next morning, stripped from the tubs and paper lining, and by the time it is scraped around the sides and bottom there is lost from one half pound to two pounds per tub, depending upon the depth of the mould. Then the butter must be relined with new liners, and in a great many instances new tubs must be used. If a shipment contains fifty tubs and the actual loss on the fifty tubs is only a pound to the tub, and if one-half of the tubs have to be replaced with new tubs, with the price of butter at 30 cents per pound, it means a loss of an average per package of 50 cents, which would figure a loss of $25 on fifty tubs. Outside of the labor involved it means a loss of $50 on 100 tubs; $500 on 1,000 tuos, and $5,000 on 10,000 tubs. You can readily see that the loss runs into big money very fast. But this is not all. Butter treated in that way never gives entire satisfaction to the consumer, and the chances are that before it is consumed there is another loss equally as great as the one just outlined. Now, these are some of the troubles that confront the merchant, which may appear to the producer as minor matters, but if you will stop to consider the results you will appreciate the gravity of the situation.

The next important point to the manufacturer who wants to place good butter on the market is the body and texture. Since the time when the incorporation of water became a matter practiced by a great many creameries, there has been more or less trouble with the body or texture of the butter. An honest merchant will not knowingly buy butter containing 16 per cent. or more of water. He does not want butter of a greasy nature, but he is looking for that solid boring-butter that has a good stiff body, and which is the kind we call a "waxy" piece of butter.

Continuing the speaker discussed the presence of mottles in butter. Waves and mottles in butter, he said, are certainly innocent looking spots and stripes, but they are costly to the manufacturer, merchant and consumer. Mottles in butter cause a loss of 4 to 6 cents, depending on the difference in the price between firsts and specials. The defect can be easily overcome by the manufacturer. It is wholly under his control.

The salting of butter plays no unimportant part. It is said that some creameries endeavor to incorporate as high as six per cent. of salt. This oversalting of butter has the same bad effect as butter that is very badly mottled. The market requires a butter containing from one to two and a half per cent. of salt.

Producers, manufacturers and merchants who handle and deal only in the pure unadulterated butter should unite in an effort to secure such laws and regulations as will keep the line distinctly drawn between the pure creamery butter and all adulterated. At the present time the people of the country will consume all the pure fancy butter made at a reasonably high price if they are given the quality they desire.

The facts enumerated, representing the losses due to poor packages, mould caused by improper handling of packages, defective texture and mottles and oversalting are such that it can be readily seen that the losses must eventually be distributed among the consumer, merchant, producer and manufacturer, when as a matter of fact it should all be borne by the manufacturer if it is his fault. It is unreasonable that the merchant or consumer should be obliged to stand it.

DAIRY MANUFACTURING INVESTIGATIONS.

The work relating to dairy manufacture, in charge of S. C. Thompson, Department of Agriculture, includes the inspection of butter, assistance in the management of creameries and other dairying enterprises and the study of processes and products from a commercial standpoint. During the last year 5,354 inspections were made in the large cities of the country. The inspection is made at the request of the dealer or producer, and defects in the butter are pointed out and suggestions made for remedying them. From the annual report it is seen that a large quantity of low grade butter is being put on the market. Of 2,161 shipments of butter from Minnesota, Wisconsin and Iowa, only 277, or about 12.8 per cent. graded "extras." This indicates that there is much need of improvement in the quality of cream used by the creameries and also in the workmanship in the creameries.

All encouragement possible has been given to the practice of grading cream, so that first class cream may be separated from the inferior cream and paid for according to quality. Twenty-eight creameries, located in nine different states, report that they are grading their cream with good results. Creameries are encouraged to pay more attention to side lines for the utilization of their by-products, and 53 creameries are known to follow such a practice. Some of the most important of these side lines are feeding buttermilk to hogs, making ice cream and manufacturing ice.

MILK INVESTIGATION.

A. D. Melvin, Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture, says in his report of the work carried on along the line of milk investigation which included the study of pasteurized and raw milk:

"One of the most interesting facts brought out by this work is that pasteurized milk ordinarily does not decompose, as it is generally supposed to do, but sours in a normal way. While this work was not sufficiently extensive to warrant final conclusions, it indicates very strongly that pasteurized milk often contains a higher per cent. of lactic acid-forming bacteria in comparison with other forms of bacteria than raw milk does. In this connection 300 cultures were examined for fermentative ability, and a new medium has been developed which promises to be of much value in milk work. This study has also included the bacteria which produce alkilinity in milk. The subjects of buttermilk and whey as by-products are under consideration and the production of an execellent massagé cream by means of separating the curds from buttermilk has resulted. It has been found that an active culture of bacillus bulgaricus is capable of converting nearly all milk sugar in whey into lactic acid. This is particularly interesting since about 10,000,000 pounds of lactic acid, valued at $158,000 was made from glucose in this country in 1905. Chemical work in connection with this investigation has supplied some exact information on the subject of chemical changes in milk due to pasteurization.

HOW TO MAKE A CREAMERY HEALTHFUL.

That "peculiar creamery odor," remarks the Butter, Cheese and Egg Journal, is simply another expression for the foul, moist, stifling air that prevails in a great many of our creameries, and which has forced many of our buttermakers into retirement on account of ill health.

With a creamery of proper construction, and with due attention to steam leaks, general cleanliness, etc., the buttermaker's business should be a healthy one. Let us take up a brief consideration of those things that should be considered in the construction of a healthy creamery.

A creamery should be located on a well-drained spot. If a site cannot be secured with sufficient natural drainage, the place should be filled in and graded until there is sufficient and natural drainage. The front end of the creamery, which usually consists of intake and office, should face south, because it stands most in need of the disinfectant action of sunlight. The rear end, which consists of the ice house and refrigerator, should face north to escape as much of the sun's heat as possible. All parts of the creamery, except the refrigerator and ice house, should be furnished with an abundance of light by providing a sufficient number of windows. This is a matter of importance both from the sanitary point of view and from the fact that the buttermaker's work can not be satisfactorily done where illumination is inadequate. The higher the ceiling the easier it is to maintain a reasonably dry atmosphere. Where so much steaming is done as in a creamery nothing could be more undesirable than a low ceiling. Adequate ventilation can be secured only by a mechanical means; i. e., by a fan or blower hitched to the engine. Experience has convinced us that no single thing will do so much toward keeping the creamery air dry and pure as a mechanical ventilator. The office should be made an entirely separate apartment, and not, as is frequently the case, a testing room, and perhaps a wash room. It should be of ample size, receive an abundance of sunlight, and have sufficient ventilation. Moreover, it should be made as attractive and comfortable as possible, for the chances are that the buttermaker spends more hours in his office, especially if he is a bookkeeper, than by his fireside. Count up the number of days you spend in your office every year and see if it is not worth while to make it as healthful as possible.

Nothing is more unsanitary in a creamery than a porous, half rotten wood floor. Only cement floors should be tolerated and these should be built upon a thoroughly drained foundation. The approach to the intake should be covered to avoid unnecessary exposure during inclement weather. Inadequate heating during cold weather virtually makes the creamery room a death chamber. Warm, moist air is bad enough, but cold moist air is ruinous to health, whether the effects are felt immediately or not. Steam pipes laid close to the floor and passing completely around the creamery room, furnish the best heater.

THE WORK OF THE YEAR.

The following article which has already appeared in many State papers, may interest butter readers.

Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust, reviewing the work of his Division for the year 1911, says that in many respects, it was a record-breaker. The receipts from fines and license fees totaled $120,993.48, while the total expenditures for the year were only $83,083.13. In other words, the collections for the period exceeded the expenditures by $37,910.33, a sum equal to nearly one-half the total expenditures. In 1910, the excess of receipts over expenditures was $31,000 in round figures.

By provision of law, all monies collected by the Division are turned over to the State Treasury for the use of the Commonwealth, and all expenditures made under fixed legislative appropriations. The protective service the Division can perform for the public must be measured not by the fines and fees collected, but by the appropriations set apart for its work.

During 1911, 8,200 samples were purchased and examined, as compared with 5,600 in 1910. In 1911, 1,029 cases for violation of the laws, were terminated, 78 per cent. of them by the payment of fines imposed; in 1910, 667 cases were terminated. Of the cases for 1911, 481 were instituted under the Milk and Sausage Acts, approved by Governor Tener. The number of violations of these new laws proves the urgent need of these beneficial acts. Their enforcement has done much to make the milk can shy of the pump and the skimmer, and to break up the old partnership between the sausage factory, the grist mill, the water-plug, and the dye-kettle.

DIRTY EGGS ON THE FARM.

Following is a notice sent out by the United States Department of Agriculture:

While there are many egg producers who take the best care of their product, the average farmer considers the eggs produced on the farm a by-product and makes very little provision for their care, aside from gathering them. A large loss is caused by dirty eggs, the number being enormous, and according to the estimate of Secretary Wilson of the Department of Agriculture, this means a money loss to the farmers of the United States of about $5,000,000 annually. This loss is very largely brought about by not gathering the eggs often enough. In wet weather more dirty eggs are found than at any other time. This, is caused by the fact that the hen's feet are often covered with mud or other filth and on going to the nest to lay she soils the eggs already in the nest. An insufficient number of nests is often the cause of many of the dirty eggs found. Eggs are laid on the ground and around the hay and straw stacks, and becoming stained are classed as "dirties." Again, when too many eggs are allowed to remain in the nest some are broken and many of the others become smeared with the broken yolks. This condition is often brought about by allowing the broody hens to use the same nests with the layers. On a farm where one nest to every four hens is provided and the nests are kept clean and well bedded, it is found that very few dirty eggs are produced. After gathering the eggs care should be taken not to place them where they will become heated, or near oil, onions or other vegetables, as they rapidly absorb odors. Although dirty eggs may be perfectly fresh they invariably sell as "seconds," and when a few dirty eggs are mixed with an otherwise fresh, clean lot, they materially decrease the price of the clean eggs.

DR. WILEY ON THE NATION'S HEALTH.

In an address to the National Conservation Congress held in Kansas City, Mo., Dr. Wiley said that the health of the nation was worth $540,000,000,000 taking $600 per annum as the average per capita earnings of the people; that is, of 4,500,000 adults, each representing a capital of $12,000 invested at five per cent. This was preliminary to and explanatory of his declaration and necessity to enforce the Pure Food and Drug laws, if the health of the nation is to be preserved and maintained.

Health, he said, has more to do with the happiness, prosperity and utility of the human organism than all the gold, coal and iron to be found in the land. For, if all of them were exhausted, science would provide substitutes, although it cannot provide any in place of health.

The dangers which confront this vast asset of the nation, he said, were the inheritance of disease or of weakened bodies, poor nutrition, unwholesome and adulterated food, the taking of disease by infection, and unsanitary conditions, the latter caused by overcrowding in big cities and the lack of hygenic knowledge in the country districts.

To preserve and make the most of this national asset, the Pure Food and Drugs act should be rigorously enforced; and in order that it should be, it seemed to him necessary to unify the activities of the State and the Nation in all that pertains to the care of the public health. In that view he thought that the establishment of a National Department of Health almost a necessity.

FACTORS INFLUENCING QUALITY IN EGGS.

In his report Secretary Wilson of the Department of Agriculture has some remarks on the two systems in vogue in the egg trade, and his remarks on the subject may be interesting to farmers and those handling eggs commercially, as well as housewives and other consumers of eggs. In substance he says on this subject:

The system of marketing eggs in general use in the middle west known to the trade as the case count system, has proven detrimental to quality. Briefly, case count buying consists of the payment of the fixed price which happens to be current at the time for each and every dozen which may be offered for sale whether the eggs themselves are good or bad. The only requisite in most cases to consummate the sale is for each egg to have an intact shell. No more practical step can be taken in improving quality than to discard this system of buying and replace it by the one known as the "loss-off" system.

Where the "loss-off" system is in use the eggs are bought as "candled," that is, subjected to a test which shows quite definitely their condition and the quality. By this test it is possible to detect "spots" "rots," and other deteriorated eggs, such as shrunken, weak, watery and heated eggs. In paying for eggs bought on this basis, the rots and usually the spots and blood rings are thrown out entirely so that they become a dead loss to the person responsible for them. Such a classification and method of payment is a distinct step forward and results in a great improvement in the eggs.

CONDENSED MILK LABELING.

Massachusetts now has a new state law in effect requiring a special label on condensed and evaporated milk, the law going into effect on January 1st. The law requires that there shall be plainly attached to each can a tag or label containing a formula for extending the milk with water, such formula to be such that the resulting milk product shall not be below the Massachusetts standard for fluid milk. There is a heavy penalty attached to the sale of evaporated, concentrated or condensed milk not having such a label. Most, if not all, the condensed milk manufacturers are preparing to furnish these extra labels.

GOOD SERVICE AT SMALL COST.

Service of an extraordinary quality has been given to the consumer by the retail grocer in recent years. Retailers have vied with each other in this matter without stopping to count the cost, with the result that many retailers are giving away a good share of their net profits in service, says the Retailers' Journal. Continuing it says:

"It is not so bad that the consumer has had in many instances more in service than the profit on the goods amounted to. The worst of it is, it has not been appreciated at its full value. Indeed, some patrons of a retail grocery store get into the habit of telephoning in the morning for fifteen cents worth of bacon, and in the afternoon for twenty-five cents worth of potatoes. In each case immediate delivery is demanded.

"If this happened once a month from one person in a block the retailer might charge it up to promotion account, but when it happens every day and many times a day, the loss on the service account piles up very high.

"No good retail grocer can afford to neglect the service branch of his business, but like every other good thing it can be overdone. Good service is one thing. Extraordinary service is another.

"Some of the best retail grocers in the country manage their service so as to avoid the loss which comes from a lack of system.

"The retail grocer if he is to succeed must manage his own business, and educate his patrons up to a due regard for the right. He can and should give them good service, but he should be big enough to let them know that there are some things that he cannot afford to do. In these days of small profits, mail order houses and chain store competition, it requires a higher grade of merchant to succeed than it did in other days.

RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION FAVORS NET WEIGHT BILL.

Under the caption of "Standardizing Food Weights" appears the following in a recent issue of The Grocer and Country Merchant, which constitutes a forceful argument in favor of the Net Weights and Measures Bill sponsered by the International Stewards Association:

I believe a Federal law compelling the use of standard packages for all goods sold in cartoons or packages would greatly relieve the honest manufacturer and protect the consumer as well. The present scheme of allowing a manufacturer to start in a 16-ounce package, then to reduce it to 14-ounces and finally to 12 ounces or less is preposterous. The idea of allowing the manufacturer to boost the sale of the short weight package by giving a premium is daylight robbery and should not be permitted. Some of our most vicious trusts have killed honest competition by the use of these tactics.

We are all guessing so far as weights and measures are concerned. If I get beat I am supposed to beat the other fellow and he is supposed to pass it along, just as we did when we were boys playing tag.

For instance, the standard weight of a bushel of sweet potatoes in Mississipppi is 60 pounds, while in Iowa it is 46 pounds.

The standard weight of a bushel of buckwheat is 56 pounds, in Kentucky, and 42 pounds in Texas.

The standard weight of a bushel of tomatoes in Tennessee is 56 pounds and when taken over into Missouri is only 45 pounds.

The standard weight of a bushel of pears in Tennessee is 56 pounds, but when they reach Missouri is only 48 pounds.

A bushel of apples in Arkansas is 50 pounds, but when taken across the line into Texas only 45 pounds.

Apples are shipped in barrels and boxes varying in size from a bushel to three bushels. These commodities are continually crossing state lines fo rconsumption in other states. I heard of a farmer who sold a peddler three pecks for a bushel and the peddler sold five pecks out of that quantity and had some left.

The weight and measures question in this country reminds me of the story in the Bible where the people undertook to build a tower to reach heaven and they were suddenly stricken with a confusion of languages. All could speak but no one could understand what the other said and they had to quit the job.

I believe it would pay the business men of this country to take a day off and help Congress establish a uniform standard of weights and measures for this country and a law compelling the use of that standard with penalties for violation as heavy as that for counterfeiting the coin of the realm.

Only a short time ago a judge asked me to stand up while he fined me $100 because a manufacturer had forgotten to put another ounce in a package of goods I sold. The next day the newspapers featured me as a short-weight artist, and I lost about a dozen customers.

JOHN W. LUX,
President, National Retail Grocers Assn.

DECEPTIVE COMPETITION.

The bureau of publicity of the International Stewards Association says:

We have been advised that numerous letters have been received by the Committee on Net Weights and Measures Legislation containing inquiries relative to the effect were the net weights and measure bill enacted law. The following general statement may serve to answer many questions that may arise in the minds of the public. Primarily the net weights and measures bill, if enacted a law will place all manufacturers, packers and dealers on an equitable and fair basis of competition and will do much to eliminate deceptive competition. When this has been done the universal law of supply and demand will assert itself.

What may be classed as flagrant practices of deception may be illustrated with barrel apples. The unscrupulous packer selects a container 10 to 25 per cent. under standard size, fills it with apples and is thereby enabled to undersell the honest merchant who has full-measure standard barrels of apples. A standard barrel should measure as follows—head diameter 17⅛ inches—length of stave 28½ inches—outside circumference at bulge 64 inches and should be capable of holding one hundred quarts of grain or dry measure. Compare a few specimens of barrels and you will undoubtedly find (at least common in the East) some with straight staves, little or no bulge, top and bottom counter-sunk two inches instead of one-half inch, length of stave 25 inches instead of 28½ inches; all of which decreases the inside capacity of the barrel. Such barrels are commonly sold in competition with full measure and honest barrels.

Measure the various brands of catsup, compute and compare the cost per fluid ounce of catsup. A well known brand of catsup which sells at a price per bottle somewhat less than other equally well known brands, costs more per fluid ounce of catsup than others. A so-called 6 pound jar of currant jelly is being sold in New York for $1.19 per jar while a guaranteed net weight 6 pound jar may be purchased from another concern for $1.25 per jar. The last mentioned contains full six pounds honest net weight while the first mentioned sold as a "six pound jar" only holds five pounds net weight. So on we can go down the line of most all classes of merchandise and find like discrepancies cleverly concealed.

Selling goods in packages of indefinite size and capacity is merely a trick resorted to by the crook to get the better of the honest competitor. Goods sold in standard size packages with the net weight, net measure or numerical count clearly stamped on the outside of the package gives the purchaser an accurate and quick means of comparison as to quantity. The enactment of the proposed law will at least close many avenues of deception and force some people to deal part way honest who, seemingly, are not so inclined at present.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

Acccording to Dr. Carl Crisand co-operation is greater than competition and we should constantly bear in mind one of the great fundamental laws of the universe, the law of independence. There is not a thing in this world which is not dependent upon some other favorable thing or condition. We all need each other, and therefore should co-operate with each other. He who loses sight of this great law soon becomes worthless timber in the economy of the world.

The committee on agriculture at Purdue university, to which was left the question of how best to use the bequest of the late William Smith, has decided to recommend to the trustees that the $50,000 in cash be used in the erection of a building for the dairy department.

Wisconsin has a new law governing the display and storing of food products which requires that sidewalk displays be securely covered by glass, wood, or metal cases or enclosed in tight containers and that all displays must be at least two feet above the sidewalk. The law is much like the laws of the kind in many other states.

According to the statement made by one of the largest oyster dealers in Baltimore, the general conditions of this industry, viewed from every standpoint, are excellent. The oysters are better than they have been for the past twenty years, and while the supply is about two-fifths short of last season, the demand is strong for both raw and cove oysters. There are about one hundred firms, large and small, engaged in the oyster business in the city of Baltimore and oysters are being shipped on the shell and open from that point in large quantities.

According to "Poultry," as many as 83,600,000 eggs were exported from Egypt in 1910. Of these 74,000,000 found their way to the United Kingdom.

The question whether it is right or wrong for a cheesemaker to guarantee the quality of his cheese has long been debated, remarks the Butter, Chese and Egg Journal. To us the question resolves itself into this: If the cheesemaker has complete charge of the cheese factory enabling him to reject any milk not fit to manufacture into a high grade cheese, then there should be little objection to his guaranteeing his work. On the other hand if he has not had the privilege to reject poor milk, then it is all wrong for him to guarantee the quality of his cheese.

The Grocers' Magazine remarks: —Don't exaggerate or make misstatements. Storage eggs are not fresh eggs and renovated butter is not creamery butter. The cheaper tea isn't "about as good" as the higher-priced article, and compound lard is not as good for cooking as pure lard.

"The oyster is well nigh a vegetarian," says the London Chronicle, "living almost exclusively on seaweed, including the minute pine pollen of the water. Smaller animals form only five per cent. of his food. He is a methodical feeder, always dining between 12 and 2 in the afternoon. When he wants his meals he simply opens his shell and lets the water flow in through a soft gill, which retains the food, allowing the water to run out again. It is only in frosty weather that the oyster goes off his feed, but he would sooner starve than let the cold water in to chill his delicate flesh.

In England food prices have greatly increased in the last few years. Since 1898 the increase in staples has averaged 13.34 per cent. Bacon and ham in 1898 cost 9.92 cents per pound; in 1906, 13.28 cents per pound; In 1908, 12.30 cents per pound; and 16.38 cents per pound in 1910. Last year bacon was quoted at 15.82 cents per pound. In London during the last fifteen years food prices have steadily risen until now they are 19.5 per cent. higher. The fact that wages in general have only increased 11.1 per cent. in that period, and railroad employes' wages only 7.3 per cent. has made the increased food prices seriously felt by the working classes.

The report of the Board of Food and Drug Inspection for the year 1911 shows a total of 1,162 cases of violations, and that of this number the government managed to lose just eleven cases.

According to the report of the Commission of Fisheries it is shown that Virginia leads all other states in the production of fish and oysters. The United States census reports of 1908 gave Virginia credit for leading in oysters but placed her second to Massachusetts in fisheries. A more careful gathering of statistics shows that the Old Dominion leads in both branches of the industry.

In a raid on improper weights and meaures in Pougkeepsie, N. Y., five hundred scales were found to have been operated to the disadvantage of the merchant.

Chicago has a new law requiring that all vegetables, including berries must be sold by weight instead of measure. The law was backed by the sealer of weights and measures. The following table of pounds to the bushel is the one that will be followed.—Apples (green) 50 pounds; apples (dried) 24 pounds; beans (green or string) 24 pounds; beets, 60 pounds; cranberries, 33 pounds; spinach, 12 pounds; potatoes (Irish) 60 pounds; potatoes (sweet) 55 pounds; corn (on the ear) 70 pounds; turnips, 55 pounds; onions, 57 pounds; peaches (dried) 33 pounds; peas (dried) 60 pounds; parsnips, 55 pounds; carrots, 55 pounds. Milk has not yet been listed, but it is customary for the wholesaler to buy it by the pound from the farmer.

Trade, a journal published in Baltimore, an authority on canned food says: "A Chicago man says he can live on $82.60 a year. This is 22.47 cents a day. To do this he says the retailer will have to be eliminated, and the farmer will have to go direct to the consumer. He says not long ago an Ohio farmer sold his tomatoes to a cannery for ten cents a bushel. At this rate a can of tomatoes that retails for fifteen cents costs the factory three cents a can, labor and all, There is surely some class to this wise kid. "A camel can go eight days without a drink—but who wants to be a camel."

Further evidence that the advances in prices are world-wide is given by the American consul at Southampton who reports to the State Department that during the past five years there has been an advance of 20 per cent. in the purchase price of many necessities in the market of the Southampton consular district. Fresh beef, mutton, hams, bacon, butter, eggs, dried fruits, sugar, coffee, fuel, tinned goods, women's apparel, footwear, cotton, clothing, cotton goods, bedding, furniture and underwear, are articles on which the advanced cost must be paid. All these articles enter the port free of duty except those with an added sugar content. There has been an advance in nearly every class of raw material. The price of flour has fluctuated but is classified as among the dearer commodities.

According to the Inland Grocer and Butcher a healthy man of fifty years has lived 18,262 days and his total consumption of food at the very reasonable rate of one pound a day would amount to not less than nine tons. The hundred million people of the United States would consume 50,000 tons of food every day or over 18,000,000 tons per year. At the very moderate estimate of 33⅓ cents per day for each inhabitant the total daily expense for food must be about 33⅓ million dollars. The annual expense is not less than 12¼ billion dollars, and it is probably more than that. These figures are growing too large to be especially suggestive, but just think of a person of say fifty years using up eight or nine tons of food in his or her short life.

The January issue of The Oysterman and Fisherman devotes a good portion of its space to the sea food and allied industries in Maryland. It contains much information regarding the oyster, crab and other products of the State's waters. Maryland has a great natural asset in her waters, a fact that is gradually being more and more realized by the people of the State. It is said that Maryland's greatest advertising medium is the oyster and Maryland oysters are sold in every place in America.

The coffee plant flourishes and reaches a size in Liberia to be found in no other part of the globe. The berries are larger and richer than those produced in any other country, and when properly cured possess the most delicious aromatic flavor. So declares an authority which claims to know.

It is announced that the National Wholesale Grocers' Association has now over 1,000 members.

The December number of the American Food Journal gives the post of honor to a portrait and sketch of Secretary James Wilson, of the National Department of Agriculture, with extended synopsis of his last annual report.

The sixth annual report of the Food and Drug Department of the State of Indiana shows that nearly 33 per cent. of the samples of food stuff analyzed were illegal.

The figures given by the United States census bureau show that Michigan is second only to New York in the amount and value of its dairy products. Recent bulletins issued by the Michigan Dairy and Food Department show that the State's dairy products maintain a high quality.

According to a recently isued bulletin of the South Dakota Food and Drug Department, many cases of tomato catsup sold in that state were found to have been made of partially decomposed material. The basis of the product was tomato pulp, made from the skins and refuse from canning factories. It is hoped that rigid prosecution by the national and state governments will make an end of that sort of swindling.

James W. Helme, editor of the Michigan Patron, has been appointed Deputy Dairy and Food Commissioner, of Michigan. The office carries with it the supervision of dairy work in the state. He is a practical dairyman.
